THE OLD-FASHIONED GAMES.

The wheel is apparently coming to stay,
For lassies as well as for laddies—
But sorry we are for it's taking away
The old-fashioned games of our daddies.

The children have wearied of flying their kites,
The shooting of marbles is over;
Gay "leap-frog" will never give any delights
And "par" is no longer in clover.

On stilts little fellows won't think they are tall,
And tops they will never be spinning,
And as for the amateur game of baseball,
No more will it give us an inning.

The round iron quoits will no longer be tossed,
And tag, dear old tag, has been banished,
While "duck on the rock" is an art that is lost
And "riding duck," also, has vanished.

Forgotten, alas! is old "ball in the hole;"
"Hop-scotch" is all out of the fashion;
The hoople we never will gracefully roll,
And "cat" is no longer a passion.

"Hide and seek" doesn't enter in anyone's mind,
For "cricket" nobody is wishing;
"Snap the whip" has departed, and soon we will find
No pleasure in going a-fishing.

"Copenhagen" in spite of its kissing, is done,
"Mumblepeg" is not worthy of notice,
And bold "stunting master" the little ones shun
As much as a hot mustard poultice.

"I spy," "wolf" and "follow your leader" have passed,
"Hare and hounds" is as flat as the ceiling,
And rowing and sailing are leaving as fast,
For nothing is thought of but wheeling.

The only old sports that may linger around
Are sledding and snow forts and skating,
For when it is cold and there's snow on the ground
The wheel is way off in its rating.

The cycle has come and is likely to stay,
For lassies as well as for laddies,
And sorry we are, for they never will play
The old-fashioned games of their daddies

MISS NANCY'S EAVESDROPPING.

"Who was that young man with you?"

Miss Nancy Armstrong asked the question of her niece, Margery. Her tone was sharp and her eyes had an angry snap in them.

"It was John Markham," answered Margery, quietly enough, as she took off her bonnet, but the tone in which the question had been asked brought an extra color to her cheek and a sparkle of resentment to her eyes.

"I thought so," responded Miss Nancy, in her most irritating way. "Margery Armstrong, I should think you'd be ashamed of yourself."

"What for?" asked Margery. "I'm not aware that I've done anything to be ashamed of."

"O, you needn't try to plead innocence," retorted Miss Nancy. "You ought to be ashamed of going with that Markham fellow, and you know it."

"I don't know any such thing," answered Margery, facing her aunt bravely. "John Markham is a respectable young man. You don't like him because there used to be trouble between the Markhams and the Armstrongs. That happened before either of us was born, and there's no reason why we should keep up the quarrel. If we see fit to like each other I don't know who's going to prevent our doing so."

"I am," answered Miss Nancy, grimly. "You needn't think—and John Markham needn't think—that a cent of my property'll go into the hands of any one of that family."

"O, you can do just as you see fit to about your property, of course," said Margery. "I haven't anything to say about that, but if you think anything you can do about it will prevent John and I from liking each other, you're quite mistaken. He don't want your property, but"—with the prettiest little blush imaginable and a softening of the voice at the import of the words—"he does want me."

"Margery Armstrong, I'd like to know how far this matter has gone," cried Miss Nancy, in wrathful surprise. "To judge by the way you talk one would suppose it is all settled between you."

"It is," answered Margery, with eyes that never flinched before the angry ones of her aunt. "I promised John to-night, coming home from church, that I'd marry him as soon as he has a home for me."

Miss Nancy fairly gasped for breath.

"You're a fool," she said, as soon as she could command her voice, "to take up with that fellow when you might marry the squire's nephew."

"I wouldn't marry the squire's nephew if he was the last man on earth," said Margery. "Look at him alongside John Markham, and I know that down in your heart you can't help owning that he's an insignificant apology for a man. All you can see to admire in him is his money, I'm sure, and if he had a thousand times more than he has I'd have just as much contempt for him as I have now."

"You may see the day when you'll wish you had some of his money," said Miss Nancy. "Wait till you're John Markham's wife and poor as poverty and things'll look different to you. Of course he thinks and you think that I'll change my mind when I find out that I can't prevent your marrying him. But you were never more mistaken in your life. Marry that fellow and I'll see that not a penny of mine goes to you."

"Please yourself about that," answered Margery. "We don't want your money. We're both strong and willing to work, and we'll get along. Don't worry about that."

"That sounds well, but you'll sing a different tune by and by," said Miss Nancy. "Just remember what I tell you."

"All right, I will," replied Margery, and then she went up to her room, not to think about what her aunt had said, but about the things she had talked of with her lover as they walked home from church together.

One day Miss Nancy decided to go to the city to do some shopping. She was always afraid of being too late for the train, and generally arrived at the station at least half an hour before it was due. She did so on this occasion, and as the day was a very warm one she sat down on the platform in the shade of some large boxes of freight that had been unloaded there, thinking it more comfortable there than in the stuffy little waiting room.

Pretty soon she heard steps on the platform, and presently voices from the other side of the pile of boxes reached her ears.

"How is your matrimonial project getting along?" was asked by one of the unseen parties. And a voice which Miss Nancy recognized as belonging to the squire's nephew answered:

"It seems to hang fire just at present. The fact is, the girl's got another string to her bow, and the chances would be against me if it wasn't for the fact that her aunt favors my suit, because she thinks I'm going to get Uncle Amos' money, and she'd like to unite the two properties. So I'm rather sweeter on the aunt at present than I am on the girl. If I get the girl at all it must be through the old lady's influence, you see. The girl's a little daisy, but the aunt's—well, she isn't a daisy, you can be sure of that! It's a question if having her in the family wouldn't be paying a dear price for all her property, but you see there's a chance of being able to shake her off after a little. I happen to know that a new railroad's going through this place, and the company will have to buy a piece of land she owns, and this land she intends to give to the girl as a wedding present. Now, just as soon as the road is put through—and it's sure to come—this land will be worth more than all the rest of the old lady's property. If the girl gets a deed of it and I get the girl I can sell it to the railroad company and make a good big sum of money out of it and we'll be independent of the aunt, and when that happens, if it ever does, I'll tell her to look out for her affairs and I'll look out for mine. I'm looking out now that she don't find out about the new railroad scheme. I want to make sure of the girl and the land before I break the news to her."

Miss Nancy listened with ears and eyes very wide open.

"Yes, when it happens, if it ever does," she chuckled. "I don't believe you'll ever get the chance you're looking for, my smart young man! I don't suppose I am a daisy—I never thought I was!—but I rather guess I'm a match for you, since I know what to do. I don't believe you'll have to shake me off. I think I'll do a little—or most—of the shaking."

Just then the train came along, and Miss Nancy got aboard of it without being seen by the young men.

That evening, when she came home, as luck would have it, she met the squire's nephew at the station.

"If you're going home you might walk along with me and help carry some of my bundles," she said, in her very pleasant manner. "I'm just about tired out. I've been seeing to a good deal of business to-day. I've had a deed made out, giving Margery the south forty acres of the farm, and I've been pricing carpets and furniture and finding out how much it's going to cost to set up a young couple in housekeeping. Of course they won't need the things right away, but I thought I'd get some idea of what the expense would be."

"They—who do you mean?" asked the young man in bewilderment.

"Why, Margery and Mr. Markham, of course," answered Miss Nancy. "Who else should I mean?"

"You don't mean to say you're going to let your niece marry that fellow!" cried the squire's nephew in surprise and consternation.

"Why, certainly," replied Miss Nancy, as if she had never had any other idea. "He's a nice young man. He's got brains, and when he gets Margery he'll get money, for the new railroad's going to make the land I've deeded her worth a snug little fortune."

"I'd like to know how you knew about the new railroad!" cried the astonished young man.

"O, I keep posted on such matters," said Miss Nancy, looking very wise. "But here we are at my gate. Thank you for bringing my bundles. Won't you come in?"

"No, not to-night," was the gruff reply, and Miss Nancy chuckled as the young man went his way.

"I guess I've got about even with you," she said, nodding her head after his retreating figure. "I guess he was about as much surprised as Margery'll be."

Her niece had seen her, and came out to meet her and help her with her bundles.

"Margery, I've got something to tell you," said Miss Nancy, anxious to have the matter disposed of. "I've thought it all over, and I don't know but you're right about John Markham. It is foolish to let an old grudge stand in the way of young folks' happiness. I've concluded to let you do as you think best, and I've had the south forty deeded to you, and when John gets you he'll get that too, if you see fit to turn it over to him. Anyway, it's yours to do just what you please with."

"Why, Aunt Nancy!" cried Margery, looking at her as if she felt sure she had gone crazy. "I thought you'd never consent to our marriage!"

"Folks change their minds sometimes," said Miss Nancy. "There! there! Don't hug me so or I'll drop this bandbox. I hear a whistle down the road that sounds like John's. You'd better go and tell him the news, and by and by, after I've had a cup of tea, bring him in to see me."—New York Ledger.

MAN DANGEROUS.

Statistics Show He Is Apt to Commit Crime at 29.

It is a singular fact, yet one substantiated by statistics, that most crime is committed in New York by men twenty-nine years old. This is not only true of the lesser but also of the greater crimes, although a man is presumed to be at that period of his life not only in the zenith of his physical, but also in full and complete possession of his mental powers, with a complete appreciation of right and wrong and their respective consequences. This condition is a problem which has not been solved by the student of criminology, and one which is made the more complex by the fact that the ages of twenty-one, twenty-seven and forty-five years nearly equal it, with the intervening years showing a far less percentage of crime. It is indeed peculiar that the criminal tendency should be so strong at twenty-nine, with no such inclination, so far as criminal statistics show, in as great a degree for the succeeding sixteen years, and then another outburst of the animal in man. This condition is found to be true by actual figures, and as all statistical computations at which average conditions are sought to be determined are arrived at by this method, so may the student of this subject, as well as the insurance magnate who bases his rates on the general average of losses in proportion to the risks taken, and does so with full safety, employ it in solving the problem before him. Charles K. Baker, chief clerk to Superintendent Lathrop of the New York bureau of statistics, has made this subject one of close study, and will soon have completed a table showing this to be true. He has already completed one relative to murderers serving life sentences in the penal institutions, and its figures bear out the general conclusion. He offers at this time no explanation for this, but hopes after he has exhausted the subject, so far as the presentation of figures is concerned, to be able to set forth reasons why these years should be productive of the most crimes.

He Rules and Sorrows.

Few monarchs have had to undergo so many sorrows—public and private—as the Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria, and no one has ever borne misfortune with greater courage. In his family he lost his first-born, a daughter, whom, though she died a little child, he is said never to have forgotten. His next brother, the Emperor Maximilian, was executed in the prime of life by the Mexicans. The fate of his only son is too tragic for more than an allusion.

In later days he has lost another brother; a granddaughter eloped with a young officer; his wife is in bad health; his nephew and heir is an invalid and the next prince in the line of succession is a scapegrace.

His public life has been one of incessant toil and danger. In the early part of his reign he suffered severely from the dagger of a would-be assassin. He waged war unsuccessfully with the French in 1859 and with the Prussians in 1866. He has been ousted from Germany, over which he once presided, and of which he formerly hoped to be emperor, as his forefathers were. And yet, in spite of such defeats, no prince is more beloved by his subjects. Indeed, his personality is the chief bond by which his heterogeneous dominions are kept together.

Recently the emperor completed his 67th year. His imperial and royal majesty was placed on the throne in the revolutionary year of 1848, when his uncle Ferdinand abdicated, and his father declined to take up the burden of the crown. In point of seniority as a sovereign he is second to Queen Victoria alone.

A Simple Fire Extinguisher.

Hand-grenades, the simplest form of fire-extinguisher, can be made at home cheaply and easily. And it is well to have at hand a simple contrivance for extinguishing a small fire at its start.

Take twenty pounds of common salt and ten pounds of sal ammoniac (nitrate of ammonia, to be had of any druggist), and dissolve in seven gallons of water. Procure quart bottles of thin glass, such as are ordinarily used by druggists, and fill with this, corking tightly and sealing, to prevent evaporation.

In case of fire throw so as to break in or near the flame. If the fire is in such a place as to prevent the bottle from breaking, as in wool or cotton, knock off the neck and scatter the contents.

The breaking of the bottle liberates a certain amount of gas, and the heat of the fire generates more, thus working its own destruction.

Nature Illuminated.

The Royal Gorge, in Colorado, is to be lighted with electricity. The running time of the trains through this remarkable canyon is so arranged that tourists are compelled to pass through it at night, and are thus prevented from viewing its beauties. To obviate this the railroad company proposes to make it as light as day, and, if anything, to add to its scenic beauties, because of the accentuated lights and shadows which must play over and between the rocks.

Clear Understanding at the Start.

Landlady—Have you a young man, Bridget?

IT is seventy-two years since the first railway in the world was opened to the public for general traffic. The Stockton and Darlington line of England began operations Sept. 27, 1825, with about twenty-one miles of single track. To-day there are over 375,000 miles of railways intercrossing the earth. In the United States alone there are 180,955 miles of tracks, more than enough to girdle the globe fourteen times with single rails, while the combined railway systems of the world would be sufficient to open a trunk line between the earth and the moon, with over 135,000 miles to spare for branch lines and sidetracks. The total mileage of the United States is nearly equal to that of all the other countries put together. Illinois, with over 10,000 miles of tracks, leads all the other States,

GEORGE STEPHENSON.

Pennsylvania ranking next with over 9,000. New York State has nearly 8,000. The District of Columbia closes the list with thirty miles.

The first rail of the Stockton and Darlington road was laid May 23, 1822, and it required three years and four months to complete twenty-one miles of single track. In 1887 the Manitoba system was extended through Dakota, a distance of 545 miles, between April 2 and Oct. 19—a few days over half a year. From the rude beginning in England less than three-quarters of a century ago has grown a stupendous system that has revolutionized the commerce of the world—that has revolutionized the world itself, annihilated space and made subservient to the will of man. There are to-day over $30,000,000,000 invested in the railroads of the world, one-tenth of the total wealth of civilized nations. More than 2,000,000 men are employed in constructing, equipping and operating the railways of the United States. The standing armies and navies of the world approximate in round numbers 3,500,000 men—the wealth destroyers. How much more powerful is the wealth-producing army of American workingmen who have changed the whole basis of civilization from the military to the industrial!

When one studies the evolution of the railway he is lost in wonderment at the giant strides that have been made during a period so comparatively short. In the early stages of its development it met with the strongest opposition, in many instances force being employed to prevent its progress. The stockholders of the canal systems and the stage coach lines, and even certain classes of workingmen under the mistaken idea that the extension of railroads means a decrease in the demand for manual labor, united their forces and fought their imaginary common enemy. Parliament took part in the proceedings, and the promoters of the initial lines were subjected to the most scrutinizing cross-examinations. When the first road was opened a great concourse of people assembled to witness the event, and while a few were there to rejoice if the undertaking proved successful, the majority of the spectators were anticipating the pleasure of seeing the "bubble burst." This opposition continued for many years, and was only dissipated when it had been demonstrated beyond dispute that the commercial interests of the country were advancing to a state that had never been attained before the introduction of the new traffic system.

On this small stretch of track between Stockton and Darlington the great railways of the world had their beginning. But even this small beginning was a long time in coming. It seems strange to us now at the present day, with the wonderful development of steam and electricity brought so vividly before us, and made a part of our daily lives, that men within a period remembered by persons now living should be so blind to the advancement of public and private interests as to actually raise and organize an opposition to a system that has proved a greater benefit to the nations of the earth than all the other projects of civilization combined. To-day we are familiar with the names of great railway kings—men who have operated millions, who have been the life or the death of the stock market by the rise or the fall of a finger. We look with something of veneration at the careers of John W. Garrett and Thomas A. Scott, and even with a mixture of admiration at the wealth producing powers and executive abilities of Cornelius Vanderbilt and Jay Gould. But greater, far greater, than a Garrett, a Scott, a Vanderbilt or a Gould, was George Stephenson, the poor, uneducated, colliery fireman, who worked out, between the long and cruel hours of manual drudgery and slavish toil, the problem of the railway for the traffic of the world. He saw a half century ahead of his time.

Opposed by Capital.

Despite the opposition of the moneyed men and the learned engineers of the day he fought his way inch by inch, and by the sheer force and tenacity of his powerful mind brought to a successful completion a project that had been the companion of his thoughts by day and a vision in his dreams by night for many long and anxious years.

To George Stephenson and to him alone belongs the credit of the magic development of the railway. From the moment when a boy he completed his first clay model of a stationary engine; from the time when the steam hissed in his ungainly "Blucher" locomotive to the day when he saw his train rushing on toward Liverpool he nurtured the idea of a grand traffic way, and when he died it was with the peace of soul of a man whose life has been one of enduring usefulness, of unceasing benefit to his fellow-man.

The railway antedates the invention of the practical locomotive, although the history of the one is contemporaneous with the other. Wooden railways upon which coal was drawn from the mines by horses were in use at an early day in Northumberland and at Wylam, where Stephenson's father worked, the first locomotive was put in operation between the coal pit and the loading quay. In 1791 Saint-Fond, a French traveler, spoke in high terms of the colliery wagonways in England, which greatly facilitated the work of the horses, and he strongly urged upon his own countrymen the economy with which coal was thus hauled to the shipping places as an inducement to them to adopt a similar mode of transit. Wagon roads of the same character were laid in the colliery districts of Scotland at a comparatively early period. During the Scotch rebellion in 1745 there was a railway between the Tranent coal pits and the small harbor of Cockinzie in East Lothian. These wooden tracks were the germ of the modern railway. With the advanced ideas of the workmen improvements gradually came and in some collieries thin plates of iron were nailed upon the upper surface of the wooden rails to afford protection from friction. It is probable that the first iron rails were laid at Whitehaven in 1738. Twenty-nine years later five or six tons of rails were cast for the Coalbrookdale Iron Works in Shropshire, and in 1776 cast iron rails nailed to wooden sleepers were laid at the Duke of Norfolk's colliery near Sheffield. The laboring people of the district were so incensed at what they imagined was a trespassing on their rights that they tore up the road, burned the coal piles and doubtless would have seriously injured John Carr, who constructed the line, had he not sought concealment in a wood.

Origin of Tramways.

William Jessop laid a line at Loughborough, in Leicestershire, in 1789, using the cast iron edge rail, with flanges upon the tires of the wagon wheels to keep them from slipping off the tracks. In 1800 Benjamin Outram substituted stone props for timber to support the ends of the rails.

STOCKTON AND DARLINGTON ENGINE AND CAR.

This plan was generally adopted and the roads became known as "Outram" roads, and subsequently, being abbreviated, formed the words "tram roads" or "tramways."

In this way the early railways were slowly improved. As yet they were mere toys. Their usefulness was limited to drawing coal out of the mines a short distance to the place of shipment. No one had at this time proposed utilizing them for general traffic purposes. While the rude railways and tramways were being formed in the mining regions the inventive genius of man was busily engaged in the solution of a new mode of locomotion. Thus far the improvements had been almost entirely confined to the roads, and the wagons were still drawn by horses.

The first person who seems to have conceived the idea of employing steam to move vehicles on land as well as ships at sea was Solomon De Caus, who was locked up at Paris as a madman in 1641. He wrote a book on the subject, portions of which were embodied in the work by the Marquis of Worcester entitled "Century of Inventions." Savery, a Cornish miner, proposed a method of propelling carriages along ordinary roads, but took no practical methods to carry out his views. In 1759 the subject was presented to James Watt, who in the specification of his patent of 1769 gave a description of the engine proposed. On several other occasions the question of applying steam as a motive power on land was brought to his attention, but he was too busily occupied perfecting his condensing engine to further consider the locomotive. The first actual model of a steam carriage of which there is a written account was made by a Frenchman named Cugnot, who placed it on exhibition in 1763. Afterward he built an engine on the same plan, but when put in motion it projected itself with such force as to knock down a wall that was in the way, and the machine was set aside as a dangerous invention. It is still preserved as a memento of the early efforts toward steam locomotion. In 1772 Oliver Evans, an American, invented a steam carriage to travel on ordinary roads, and obtained from the State of Maryland in 1787 exclusive right to make and operate it. But no practical use ever came of the invention. William Symington, one of the inventors of steam navigation, conceived the idea of utilizing steam in the propulsion of carriages, but the roads in Scotland were in such bad condition that he got no further than to construct a model.

The first model of a steam carriage in England was made in 1784 by William Murdock, the assistant and friend of Watt. Murdock succeeded in making an engine about a foot high that generated enough steam by the aid of a spirit lamp to rush along at quite a rate of speed over a walk a mile in length. One dark night the pastor saw the little machine coming snorting up the path, and, taking it for the "evil one," sprang into the hedges on the side with shrieks of terror.

Richard Trevethick's Success.

About the years 1800 and 1802 the question of building railways for stage coaches was discussed and it was further proposed that stationary engines might be placed at certain distances apart and by means of circulating chains greatly lessen the employment of horses. While these plans were being considered Richard Trevethick, a pupil of William Murdock, built a steam carriage for use on the common highway. He took out his patent March 24, 1802. The carriage had the appearance of an ordinary stage coach. The horizontal cylinder, the boiler and the furnace box were placed in the rear of the hind axle, and to the credit of the inventor it may be said that this was the first successful high pressure engine constructed on the principle of moving a piston by the elasticity of steam against the pressure only of the atmosphere. In addition to being well constructed, Trevethick's steam carriage possessed the quality of moving quite rapidly along the roadway.

There were many inventors after Trevethick who sought a motive power to supersede horses, and while some produced very meritorious works none met the tests required of them. There were Blenkinsop of Leeds, who had an engine with toothed wheels that ran upon a cogged rail; Chapman of Newcastle, who employed a system of chains, and Brunton of Derbyshire, who invented a "mechanical traveler" to go upon legs, working alternately like those of a horse. These and similar contrivances projected about the same time show that invention was actively at work and that many minds were trying to solve the traction problem. Blackett, a colliery owner of Wylam, whose tramway ran by the house where George Stephenson was born, was one of the most persistent of capitalists in his endeavors to obtain a locomotive to haul his coal wagons. He had tried several of the unwieldy inventions of the day and was becoming the laughing stock of his acquaintances, who regarded him as a monomaniac on the subject of steam motive power.

While Blackett was experimenting at Wylam George Stephenson was racking his brains to the same end at Killingworth, where he had been appointed engine-wright of the collieries. Blackett paved the way for Stephenson. Profiting by the failures of the locomotives of the past, Stephenson planned and constructed his first locomotive in 1814, naming it My Lord, after Lord Ravenswood, the principal owner of the Killingworth colliery, who advanced the money. This locomotive, which was afterward known as the Blucher, while a great improvement on all previous machines, was very cumbersome and clumsy. It, however, answered the purpose for which it was intended very well and was regarded at the time as a wonderful piece of mechanism. The inventor made many engines after that, but none gave him as much satisfaction as this first rude locomotive.

Among the men of this period who were forming projects for the construction of railways in the important districts of population were William James of West Bromwich and Edward Pease of Darlington. James was exceedingly interested in the question of traction power, and though he had made no personal inventions he performed as great a service to the public when he found and appreciated George Stephenson. As early as 1803 James published an article in which he stated he contemplated the projection of a railway between Liverpool and Manchester. He had many other railway propositions under way, but nothing came of them, except to stimulate the demand for better transportation facilities.

Edward Pease was a man of an entirely different character. He was not so ambitious as James, and it seems he at first only contemplated a horse tramroad between Stockton and Darlington, but as he proceeded with the project and after he had had an interview with Stephenson he became an earnest convert to the locomotive system. What Pease first contemplated was the means of selling coal at the stations along the line of the proposed railway. He did not dream of the outlet that would be afforded to other markets, and such a thing as a passenger carriage never entered into his calculations. After one unsuccessful attempt in parliament the Stockton and Darlington railway act was finally passed April 19, 1821. The projectors did not originally contemplate the employment of locomotives, for in the act they provide for the making and maintaining of the tramroads for the passage upon them "of wagons and other carriages, with men and horses or otherwise." The public were to be free "to use with horses, cattle and carriages" the roads formed by the company on payment of the authorized rates between certain hours. It is clearly obvious from this that the projectors of the line had no clear conception as to the scope and operations of their railroad.

Some time elapsed after the passage of the act for the construction of the railway before any steps were taken to carry it into effect. Toward the close of 1821 Stephenson called on Pease and strongly urged the adoption of the locomotive on the new road. The inventor made so good an impression that he was soon after appointed engineer of the line, conducted a personal survey of every foot of the route and began active preparations for building the road.

Estimate of the Cost.

In making his first estimate of the cost he set down £6,200 for stationary engines, not even mentioning locomotives. His reasons for this will be apparent when it is known that the whole question of steam locomotive power was in those days, among practical and scientific men alike, largely in doubt. He preferred to quietly impress upon the stockholders the wisdom of adopting a method he was confident would prove a complete success. After visiting Stephenson's locomotive at Killingworth Pease and another stockholder became convinced that it was the proper system, and in 1823 an amended act was passed permitting the use of steam power.

Two years later the road was opened to the public, and from the start proved a great success. The rails were of malleable and cast iron and the gauge was four feet eight and one half inches. The first engine, the Active, that was put on the line, was constructed by George Stephenson. It weighed about eight tons, and was capable of drawing about forty tons, in insignificant contrast with the American "consolidation" locomotive of to-day weighing fifty tons and able to haul on a dead level over 24,000 tons, while more powerful engines are still being designed.

No sooner did the coal and merchandise trains begin to run than new business relations sprang up between Stockton and Darlington, and the increase in freight traffic called into existence a new passenger transportation. Before his plant was put in operation an attempt had been made to run a stage coach between Stockton, Darlington and Barnard Castle three times a week, but owing to the want of support it was discontinued. However, after the railway began running the stages were again put on and did a thriving business. The railway company, recognizing the importance of this branch of service, started the first passenger coach, the Experiment, Oct. 10, 1825, a fortnight after the opening of the line. It was drawn by one horse and performed the journey daily each way between Stockton and Darlington, accomplishing the distance of twelve miles in about two hours. The fare was a shilling and each passenger was allowed fourteen pounds of luggage free. The Experiment was not operated by the railway company, but was let to Pickersgill and Harland, who paid tolls for the use of the line. This first passenger coach was regarded as a wonderful conveyance at the time, but it would cut a rather poor figure if placed beside the modern drawing-car palaces constructed at a cost of $20,000 or over.

Stephenson next constructed and equipped with his locomotive the Liverpool and Manchester Railway, which was opened Sept. 15, 1830. Passengers were carried the entire distance of thirty miles in a little over an hour. Inasmuch as it had been previously considered a great feat for the locomotives on the Stockton and Darlington road to beat the stage coaches, and twelve miles an hour had been regarded as absolutely dangerous, this new rate of speed must have been looked upon as something phenomenal. The growth of the railway from this date was rapid, companies being formed in all civilized countries.

America quickly adopted the railway system. As early as 1827 a crude line was opened between Boston and Quincy for the purpose of importing granite for the Bunker Hill monument. In August, 1829, the Carbondale railroad was opened by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company and extended from Honesdale, Pa., to Carbondale, a distance of about sixteen miles. It was the first road on which a locomotive was used in this country. The engine was built in England, under the direction of Horatio Allen, who enjoyed the distinction of being the first to run a locomotive in America. It was called the Stourbridge Lion and arrived at its destination Aug. 9, 1829.

B. & O. RAILROAD, 1830-35.

First Baltimore & Ohio Road.

In May, 1830, the first division of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway, extending from Baltimore to Ellicott's Mills, a distance of fifteen miles, was formally opened, but the passenger service was not inaugurated till July 5 of the same year, owing to the scarcity of cars. Horse power was employed until the road was completed to Frederick, in 1832.

Postal Savings Bank.

Dispatches from New York are to the effect that a canvass of the presidents of prominent banking institutions in that city has disclosed the fact that most of them are opposed to the proposed postal bank system. Very few of them, it is said, were willing to express opinions for publication, but most of them virtually agreed with a statement of President Mason of the Bank of New York that the country possesses already all the banking accomodation it needs.

Since the bankers did not definitely express opposition to the postal bank scheme it may be doubted whether the conclusion drawn by the canvasser that all of them are antagonistic is justified. On an issue of this kind there is a considerable difference between a non-committal attitude and that of hostility. The men who are doubtful of the wisdom of the measure because on first consideration they do not see how it could be made practicable under our Government may become firm supporters of it if the bill submitted to Congress proves to be well devised.

The statement that the country has all the banking accommodation it needs could hardly have been advanced by a banker having relations with the nation at large. Only in the cities and the more populous and wealthy sections of the provinces are banking facilities adequate to the requirements of the people. In many parts of the Union there are vast areas of country in which there are no banking accomodations at all. The result of this is that money becomes congested in the financial centers while outlying districts have not the means of carrying on their industrial and commercial development except under terms too onerous to be profitable.

Up to this time no objection of unanswerable character has been made to the measure. On the other hand, the arguments for it set forth by the Postmaster-General remains unassailable. Postal banks will draw to the channels of trade amounts of money now hoarded because of a lack of confidence in private banks. They will incite to thrift and saving among people of small means and to that extent improve the moral and material condition of the people. They will carry banking facilities to all parts of the Union and give residents of remote districts something of an equality with those of the cities or more populous counties.

These benefits are certainly of sufficient importance to make it worth while trying to attain them. The trial, moreover will not be a rash and unheard of experiment. Postal savings banks exist in most of the civilized nations of the earth and have not proven injurious to private banks or to any other industry of the community. On the contrary they have been advantageous to bankers as well as others by increasing the amount of cash available for business. What has proven itself so beneficial elsewhere is hardly likely to be a total failure in America, and for that reason we hesitate to believe the bankers of New York have been so unanimous in opposing the measure as has been represented by the recent dispatches.—Call.

January 1 brought into force the new primary election law of California, the most sweeping and thorough primary law in the land. The Maryland Legislature is now wrestling with a bill similar in spirit to the California law, as it provides for compulsory primaries and rigid State inspection. There, as here, the officers of primary elections are to be chosen from lists submitted by the official committees of the several political parties. Evidently the national conference on primary reform has had a good effect, as ten states are now seriously considering the recommendations urged by its promoters. A session of the conference is soon to be held, when it may be expected that the California law will be critically examined. Officials and political organizations must not lose sight of the fact that our new primary law exacts from them in January performance of important duties.

The delinquent subscriber is always the butt of the good, bad and indifferent wit of the editor. An up-country exchange recently says it received a returned copy endorsed by the postmaster: "Deceased. Use asbestos wrapper and change the address."

For the year 1897 the number of miles of railroad built in the United States is placed at 1864. California stands first with 210 miles, principally the Valley railroad, while in eleven states and territories not a new mile of track was laid.

NOT EXACTLY A BABY.

How a Woman Played a Trick on a Cable Car Conductor.

"John, dear, some one ought to speak to that woman. See, she's smoth"—

"I'm not running this road. Besides, it's probably her own kid."

"Well, I shall certainly inform the authorities. It's over 15 minutes that dear little thing hasn't had a breath of air. Won't you call the police?"

Of course this dialogue was furnished by husband and wife. Scene—A cable car bound down town. The character spoken of as "that woman" was a female of uncertain age and decided sternness. She boarded the car at Fifty-ninth Street. In her arms she carried the "it" referred to man fashion as "the kid." Tenderly, almost to suffocation, the woman hugged her charge. Not even the end of its tiny nose nor a wisp of baby hair peeped out from the folds of the long cloak. The woman snuggled and cuddled the bundled child, and never an infantile wail or a gasp for breath aroused the wondering passengers to action. When the car reached Thirty-fourth street, "that woman," still hugging her bundle, left the car. The husband and wife followed. The car sped on.

Safe on the sidewalk, the woman paused, shook the folds of the baby's cloak, and deposited on the pavement a long eared, wet nosed, watery eyed spaniel. That was all.

"Well, John, I'm beat," said the wife.

"So's the conductor and the company," responded John. "She smuggled the best and got the best of the company. I was smart enough to mind my own business. Come on."—New York Sun.

Tunneling the Strait of Messina.

Engineering achievements and possibilities, from the modern point of view, are receiving an additional illustration in the case of the projected tunnel between the mainland of Italy and the island of Sicily, plans and details of which, in model, as executed by the Italian civil engineer De Johannis, have attracted much attention at the University of Padua. After thorough and careful studies of the strait of Messina, its varying depths, the nature of the ground and of all other conditions which might assist or interfere with such an undertaking, De Johannis decided that the beginning of the tunnel should be near San Giovanni di Sanitello, at the foot of the Aspromente mountain range, the mouth on the other side to be located on the degli Inglesi plain. The entire tunnel will be nearly two miles long and will consist in the main of two shafts of about 10,000 feet each, descending at a grade not exceeding 32 feet in each 1,000. Such a tunnel is thought preferable to a bridge that would involve such a great span and wind exposure.—Harper's Round Table.

Maryland Rice and Tobacco.

According to the Baltimore News, the farmers of Maryland are becoming interested in the movement for a general cultivation of tobacco and for the introduction of the raising of rice. In earlier days tobacco was grown throughout the state, but for the last half century it has been confined to the counties of southern Maryland. Rice has never been grown in the state, but the recent success with this crop in lower New Jersey has led many to think that it can be profitably taken up in Delaware and Maryland. The yield of rice is from 35 to 60 bushels an acre, and the net profit is said to be from $25 to $45 an acre.

Mrs. J. R. Eldred accompanied her husband from Big Pine, and is visiting at Independence.

George Naylor got back last Monday from a short visit to San Francisco, and with his mother at Reno.

R. Way has been in town all the week interviewing the Supervisors relative to further improvements on the fireproof vault.

Lost—On New Year's eve, at the dance hall or pavilion, a lace handkerchief. Finder please leave at this office and blige MRS. E. P. JUDD.

Dave Holland came in from Randsburg on yesterday morning's stage. He says that camp is steadily progressing in a solid, business-like way.

Inyo Lodge, No. 221, F. & A. M., will hold a public installation of officers tomorrow night. After the installation ceremonies a social dance will be given at Mairs' Hall by the Dancing Club.

H. Levy has been confined to his room for over three weeks with a bad attack of rheumatism. As soon as he gets able to travel he will go to the Coso springs. He has anly been able to sit up within the past few days.

Jerry Mairs has been doing some excellent work on the roads in this vicinity. With the limited means at his disposal he has succeeded in doing a great deal of good, particulary on the depot road, which was cut up and in bad condition.

Howard Mairs, youngest son of O. I. Mairs, has been very ill for the past four weeks, He was in a critical condition aqout a welk ago, and three physicians were in attendance. He has now passed the danger point and is slowly convalescing.

We desire to return our sincere thanks to Supt. Boswell and Messrs. Berry, Luddin, Jr., Wallace, Robinson, Zricoli and Nicholson of the Inyo County Mining and Development Co., and Messrs. Gunn, Slacke, Morahan and Stansborough of the Minnietta mine, and all others who so nobly assisted in the search for our boy, Grevy, who was lost in the Argus mountains during Dec. 31., 1897, and Jan. 1, 1898.

MR. AND MRS. F. FITZGERALD.

The Christmas Tree.

On New Year's eve, the little one's souls were delighted with the Christmas tree postponed from Christmas eve because of the death of their playmate and friend. The tableau presented when the curtain rose at the pavilion was a beautiful one. The school girls, robed as fairies in white with silver spangles and crowns and wands of silver were seated about the beautiful evergreen. The following program was rendered:

Opening Song - - - Choir
Blessing - - Rev. Nicholas
Fairy Dance - - Helen Gunn
Song - - - Choir
Recitation - - Lou Robinson
Recitation - - - Howard Gill
Song - - - - Choir

Distribution of Gifts.

Mrs. Sophie Franks and the school girls deserve great credit for the success of the Christmas tree.

A Lost Child

Frank Fitzgerald and his wife spent New Years' eve and morning in a state of terrible suspense. Their eldest child, Grevy, left Modock to carry the mail to Darwin, twelve miles distant. He rode a little donkey named Jumbo. When the time arrived for the child's return the parents became anxious, and as hours passed by with no signs of the missing boy they became well nigh mad with fear. The country is a very mountainous one, and traveling is highly dangerous when the trail is left. A party of friends, with Mr. Fitzgerald in the lead, started to trail the tracks of the donkey, and a number of hours were spent without result. At every step they expected to come upon the dead body of the child. At last, after an absence of 27 hours, the little one appeared on the donkey, almost dead with hunger, cold and exhaustion. He told a pitiful tale of distress—how he had ridden until overpowered by sleep, when dismounting he implored Jumbo not to forsake him, and prayed to le bon Jesu to watch over him and fetch him home once more.

The Tioga Road.

DEPARTMENT OF HIGHWAYS
STATE OF CALIFORNIA
SACRAMENTO, Dec. 18, 1897.

Hon. R. S. Miner, Independence, Inyo Co., Cal.

MY DEAR SIR:—In regard to the road connecting the Mono county roads with the Tioga road, I desire to state that this Department is earnestly considering the subject, and will urge this work and aid it in every possible way.

It is to be regretted that the bill passed at the last session of the Legislature failed to become a law; but the title was defective—not stating the fact that an appropriation was made, and the Governor's signature could not correct this defect should have existed, and his earnest desire to see such a measure become a law, as he realizes the importance of this connecting road.

I hope to give the matter some additional attention before the next Legislature meets.

Please present my regards to my good friends of Inyo and Mono, and with best wishes for your health and welfare, I remain,

Yonr friend,
MARSDEN MANSON.

Christmas at Fish Springs.

The young people of the district treated us to a very prettily trimmed tree at the school house Christmas evening. The distribution of presents was preceded by the following literary program:

Song—"In a Manger," - - School
Recitation—"Awake," - Jas. Connor
Song—"Amber Tresses Hid in Blue," - - - - Quartet
Recitation—"Curfew Must Not Ring Tonight - Lizzie Van Ness
Recitation - - Mary Connor
Duet—"Mountain Maid," - - Helen and Florence Goodale
"Her Letter," - - Eva Jones
"The Clown's Baby," Richard Reynolds
Song—"The Sailor Boy," - Quartet
"Grandmother's Beau" - Rosa Lane
Evils of Intemperance - Dan Connor
Song—"O'er the Water," - School
"The Last Hymn," - - Hattie Lane
"The Aesthetic Housekeeper," - - - Miss Gregory
Song—"Young Charlotte," - Quartet
"A Small Girl," - Nellie Lane
"An Adventure," - Grant Goodale
"A Christmas in the Skies," - - - - Enid Peterson
Christmas Carol - - School

We extend our heartiest thanks to all those who assisted in getting up the tree and entertainment.

After the exercises at the school house Mr. and Mrs. Lane received their friends and the evening was pleasantly spent in singing and dancing.

The New Year Dance.

The Dancing Club skipped the old year out and the new year in. Like the previous dances of the club the affair was somewhat informal, and and enjoyed heartily by all who participated. The fact that a social club can be successfully maintained in Independence has been demonstrated. The Matlack orchestra furnished the music, and coffee and sandwiches were served in the hall at midnight. The young folks danced until five o'clock in the morning of the New Year.

Randsburg Notes

A busy throng of 100 laborers, with picks, shovels and wheelbarrows, are at work grading Broadway. This work is being done by popular subscription of business men and property owners. The laborers are paid regular miners' wages and the work has been beneficial in giving employment to many idle men. The property owners on the north side of the street will be forced to rafse their buildings from three to five feet in order to come up to the established grade, but there are no murmurings of discontent over it, and all seem to realize the benefits to accrue from having a level street. Randsburg has no municipal organization beyond a "Citizen's Committee." They recommended the work, and $300 to $500 per day "don't cut any ice" with property owners in a measure of general profit.

The recent difficulty about paying off the employees of the G. B. mine, owned by Frank Cole of Los Angeles, has been amicably adjusted, and everybody has been paid in full. Charley Koehn issued his individual checks and paid off everybody on security given him by the owner of the mine. The men were behind two months in their wages and struck at an opportune moment when the cleanup at the mill was being made.

It is rumored that an English company of capitalists have combined to bring water from Little Lake to Randsburg. This is a water scheme second only to that of the great Bear Valley water system, The water can be brought by gravity flow to within four miles of Randsburg in unlimited quantity. The route of the pipe line and ditch for conveying the water will be through a rich placer mine region, where millions will be taken out by washing processes. It will open up immense tracts of land suitable for horticuitural and viticultural enterprises to the north of Randsburg. A twenty-inch stream of running water in Goler alone would make its promoters as rich as Croesus. Judge Harris and Young Wilshire, who have large interests in this section, are prominently spoken of in connection with this great enterprise, the possibilities of which are practically unlimited and mean so much to the great desert regions. If completed, a water system, such as is contemplated, will add a population of 25,000 people to Southern California inside of ten years and make Kern County the richest mining region in the world.

INDEPENDENCE, Jan. 5, 1898.

To the Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of Inyo Co., Cal.:

We, your committee appointed to inspect the County Hospital, beg leave to offer the following report.

We have examined the wards and sleeping apartments of the County Hospital, and find that the inmates have good and comfortable rooms and beds and that the food is good and plenty of it; also that the patients are well satisfied with the attending physician. We have also interviewed the patient, Mrs. Knox, whose discharge was recommended by the Grand Jury. We found her sick, and in our opinion it would be an injustice to discharge her from the Hospital at the present time, as she is unable to work or earn her own living, and therefore it would be but a short time before she would be again a county charge, all of which is respectfully submitted.

J. J. STEWART,
J. R. ELDRED,
Committee.

The committee appointed to examine into and report upon the condition and affairs connected with the Court House and the various county offices reported as follows:

INDEPENDENCE, Cal. Jan. 5, 1897.

Your committee appointed to examine the Court House and surroundings respectfully report as follows:

1st. We recommend that water be furnished the Court House with taps to be placed in the Clerk's, Sheriff's, District Attorney's and Assessor's offices, also the jail.

2d. That the main be 1½ inch pipe, with ¾ inch taps, and that there be 5 steel pressed agate ware water basins be furnished for the above offices and rooms.

3d. That there be a water closet with taps erected in the rear of the prisoner's cells, with sewerage connections with main closet.

Respectfully submitted,
FRANK FITZGERALD,
FRANK SHAW.

In accordance with petition, the reports of Road Viewers and proceedings of this Board heretofore heard. It is hereby ordered that a public highway be and is hereby established as follows, towit:

THE CARETAKER.

Caretaker is a word adopted into modern use and means one who takes care of, and is very generally applied to those employed to take care of things committed to their keeping. The way some people have of taking care of themselves is very suggestive of the need of a caretaker. The human body to such is a mansion filled with precious things uncared for, where thieves may break in and rust doth corrupt. Pains and aches are thieves, and the body left uncared for to their spoliage will be robbed of all its comforts and despoiled of its peace of mind and happiness. It is a happy thought to look upon St. Jacobs Oil as a caretaker, to employ it as a watchman against such intruders. There is hardly an ache, from a toothache to a toeache, that it can't take care of and effect a cure, and pains the most violent are conquered by its use. Its office as a caretaker is to prevent the spread of aches and pains into a chronic stage. Keep a bottle of it in the handiest place and be assured of good care and comfort.

A number of Atchison men who have dyspepsia, recently formed a club to exchange ideas, but they are all so bad-tempered that they had a fight the first night.

Piso's Cure for Consumption has been a family medicine with us since 1865.—J. R. Madison, 2409 42d Ave., Chicago, Ills.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with urine and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys. When urine stains linen it is evidence of kidney trouble. Too frequent desire to urinate or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfils every wish in relieving pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passages. It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar. So remarkably successful has Swamp-Root been that if you wish to Prove its great merit, you may have a sample bottle and pamphlet both sent free by mail. Mention this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

WAIL OF A FLAT DWELLER.

Mr. Weekenday's Remarks on New York Apartment Bathrooms.

"A long and bitter experience in apartments forces me to observe," said Mr. Workenday, shivering as he hopped on the oilcloth of the bathroom with his bare feet, "that the architects who plan the ordinary flat of commerce do not bathe. I don't judge this from their appearance, because they are a particularly clean and nice lot of men. But I cannot believe that any one with the least respect for the importance of the bathroom could treat it with such architectural stepfatherliness.

"It always is shoved away in a dark corner as far from the bedrooms and as near the parlor or dining room as possible. It always is dark and ventilated by an airshaft up which there blows perpetually a dismal draft that has something on its mind and groans about it all the time. It ought to have something on its mind, for it is a sure killer. Then, of course, the bathroom, being the only place in the house where one takes off all his clothes and gets wet all over, is the place which most frequently has no heating appliances.

"Again, why do so many architects build the washstand in the hallway instead of in the bathroom, where it belongs? I don't know whether they think that a man enjoys taking his bath in sections or whether they act on the theory that he ought to take it gradually, preparing himself for the bathtub by degrees.

"I asked an architect once why he did it. 'Well,' said he, 'we hardly ever do differently except in private houses.'

"Has only the privateer, then, as the Europeans call him, the right to take a complete bath in one room, or has evolution produced a species of flatters who naturally are incapable of doing it?

"I suppose that the smallness of bathtubs is explained by the lack of room. Of course every flathouse bathtub is too small for any one except an infant, and I have noticed, not without some awe, that in each new flat into which we move the bathtub is smaller than it was in the one preceding. As I am growing stouter each year, a genuine misfortune for one whose finances make a third or fourth flat necessary, I am sure that if we make two or three more 'moves' we will, on this scale of bathtub decrease, find a bathtub into which I will not be able to get at all."—New York Press.

A TEST FOR HORSEFLESH.

But Even a Chemist Cannot Always Recognize It.

"People are apt to jump at conclusions," said a chemist in speaking of the latest notable murder case. "Chemistry is a very nice science, but it is possible to make some sad blunders in applying it to law and evidence. There are certain things you can prove by it if you are sure of your premises and certain other things that you cannot. This thing of trying to prove a good deal by chemistry calls to mind the beef extract case that gave a packer in this city considerable uneasiness.

"Somebody got hold of his beef extract and claimed that it was made from horseflesh, and it was proved by analysis—that is, to the satisfaction of the man that analyzed it. The ordinary test for horseflesh, according to the authorities, is glycogen. This is a substance that, speaking in a general way, is found in horseflesh, but does not exist in beef, and it was shown that this particular extract contained glycogen.

"The packer came to us in some distress of mind for a way out of the difficulty. He said his extract was made of nothing but beef, and he wanted us to help him prove it, and we did so to his relief and to the satisfaction of the health officers. We demonstrated that, while an ordinary piece of beef did not contain glycogen, it existed in the heart, liver and blood of cattle, and some of each of these might have entered into the making of the beef extract. The result was that the chemist who had arrived at such sweeping conclusions from the first test had to back down from his position."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Carries Credentials.

A remarkably old woman passed through Reading on a train bound for Girardville. She is Mrs. Catherine McLaughlin, of Waterbury, Conn., who is visiting her son, Justice of the Peace John McLaughlin, of Girardville.

Mrs. McLaughlin is 109 years old. She reads without glasses and can walk a mile without trouble. Some people are disposed to question her age, but the official papers she carries stop all doubt.

She has certified copies with her of the church and other records to show that she was born in Ireland 109 years ago. She is a tea drinker, avoids coffee and enjoys pipe smoking, moderately. She will remain in the coal regions about a month and then intends to return to Waterbury.—Boston Post.

CAUGHT A WALKING FISH.

It Had No Gills, but Had Four Legs and Know How to Use Them.

Frank Davey, the photographer, is the possessor of a very strange fish, which after having exhibited to a number of friends while still alive he put into alcohol to keep. The fish is known to some people here, but is quite rare. Its home is in the deep water, and if the story told by the Chinaman who procured it—namely, that the catch was made in comparatively shallow water just outside of the harbor—is to be depended on the occurrence is indeed unusual.

It is about three inches in length and when alive was of a bright yellow hue, with spots of black here and there. Its mouth is quite large, and the part of the body nearest is correspondingly large. It then tapers off to a small tail, but the peculiar part is that there are no gills, or what are popularly known as such. Where these should be the skin is just as it is all over the body. At a distance of about half an inch and protruding from the belly near the central part are what might be called arms or legs. They are jointed and have some ten very fine claws. These, together with another pair farther anterior, the fish, when alive, used to walk about with on the bottom of the jar in which it was contained.

It would show fight instantly when approached and gave every sign of being endowed with the spirit of the evil one, bristling up its fins, snapping its sharp teeth, elevating a sharp, knifelike appendage on the top of its nose and sending two currents of water from holes or false gills just back of the large, armlike appendages mentioned above.

When the fish was killed and placed in alcohol, the bright yellow disappeared entirely and left in its place a whitish color.—Pacific Commercial Advertiser.

DIPLOMACY.

The Astute Mayor Knew How to Help Along His Own Town.

A number of indignant citizens had filed into the office of the mayor of a small but progressive town.

"We called," said the spokesman of the party, "to see about your announcement that you would fight to the bitter end the proposal of those two railroad companies to lay tracks so as to connect."

"Well," was the reply, "what of it?"

"You don't deny saying it, then?"

"Certainly not."

"And yet you call yourself a wide awake man, competent to look after the interests of an ambitious community like this?"

"I am doing my best to deserve approval."

"Don't you realize that the junction of those two roads is one of the best things that could happen to this city?"

"Certainly."

"And yet you are doing your best to stop it?"

The mayor reflected for a few minutes and then said:

"Gentlemen, will you keep a secret?"

"If it's nothing detrimental to the city's interests."

"Well, I am just as anxious to have that work done as you are, but you know how they usually go about such things. If we let them alone, they'll begin work about the last of November, leave things torn up all winter and not finish before next summer is half over. Now, if they have really determined to make this improvement, my saying I disapprove of it won't change them, but it will have one effect—it'll put them on their mettle. They'll get together a gang of men some night and put them to work with lanterns and rush the job through so fast that there won't be any interruption of traffic whatever."—Washington Star.

A BIG REGULAR ARMY.

The mightiest host of this sort is the army of invalids whose bowels, livers and stomachs have been regulated by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. A regular habit of body is brought about through using the Bitters, not by violently agitating and griping the intestines, but by reinforcing their energy and causing a flow of the bile into its proper channel. Malaria, la grippe, dyspepsia, and a tendency to inactivity of the kidneys, are conquered by the Bitters.

"Do you think she loves you?" "I don't know. I'm all in the dark." "Well, if she entertains you that way, I think it's pretty good proof."

FREE TO OUR READERS.

Our readers will be pleased to learn that the great discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, has been so universally successful in quickly curing all forms of kidney and bladder troubles, that those who wish to Prove for themselves its wonderful merit may have a sample bottle and a book of valuable information both sent absolutely free by mail. Nothing could be fairer or more generous than this liberal offer, and we advise our readers to write mentioning this paper and send their address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is the discovery of a great physician, and as such is not recommended for everything, but will be found just what is needed in cases of kidney and bladder disorders—or troubles arising from weak kidneys, such as gravel, rheumatism, pain or dull ache in the back, too frequent desire to pass water, scanty supply, smarting or burning in passing it. Swamp-Root stands the highest for its wonderful cures. The regular sizes are sold by druggists, price fifty cents and one dollar.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars: free.

THE PACIFIC COAST SYRUP CO.

The first two weeks' meeting at the Ingleside race course was a great success, the management, under the able supervision of F. H. Green, the secretary of the association, left no stone unturned to cater to the public's wants, in furnishing good cards for every day's racing and assured good honest sport, which was fulfilled to the letter. The second two weeks meet will begin at Ingleside, November 29th to December 11th, inclusive, where some of the best horses in the United States will contest for supremacy. Visitors to San Francisco should avail themselves of this opportunity and visit these beautiful grounds, which excel anything of its kind in the Union.

The New Ribbons.

The new ribbons are very attractive and are evidently going to be more than ever a feature of dress trimming. There are gorgeous plaids and the most fascinating array of stripes, up and down and across in the Roman fashion. Three or four shades of one color are striped together, with possibly a velvet stripe on one edge, and then again there are many stripes of contrasting colors blending together with a bright, pretty effect. Oriental brocaded ribbons add to the variety, and so do glace ribbons with fancy borders. There are uncut velvet ribbons with the ribs running crosswise, some in lovely colors, the newest being a clear shade of purple blue.

Bermuda Lobsters.

In the neighborhood of the Bermudas the sea is extremely transparent, so that the fishermen can readily see the horns of the lobsters protruding from their hiding places in the rocks at considerable depth. To entice the crustaceans from these crannies they tie a lot of snails in a ball and dangle them in front of the cautious lobster. When he grabs the ball, they haul him up.

ABOUT CHANGE OF LIFE.

"I suffered for eight years, and could find no permanent relief until one year ago. My trouble was Change of Life. I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and relief came almost immediately. I have taken two bottles of the Vegetable Compound, three boxes of Pills, and have also used the Sanative Wash, and must say I have never had anything help so much. I have better health than I ever had in my life. I feel like a new person, perfectly strong. I give the Compound all the credit. I have recommended it to several of my friends who are using it with like results. It has cured me of several female diseases. I would not do without Mrs. Pinkham's remedies for anything. There is no need of so much female suffering. Her remedies are a sure cure."—MRS. ELLA KRINER, Knightstown, Henry Co., Ind.

By the way, the leading druggists tell us that the demand for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is simply beyond their power of understanding; and, what is best of all, it does the work promptly and well.

LOVE LIVES ON.

I took from their hiding place last night
Your letters, sweetheart, and read;
And their passion thrilled in the waning light,
Though I said, "My love is dead."
But tears came back to my world-worn eyes
As I thought of a golden June
And lovers who sang, "Love never dies
While boats drift under the moon."

For white wings come, and white sails go,
Drifting out into the dawn;
But memory comes with refluent flow,
And it's true as ever it was, I know,
That love lives on and on.

It comes with the touch or the clasp of a hand,
Or the glance of a stranger's eye,
Or a kindly act in a foreign land,
Or the gleam of a starry sky,
Or a drifting boat on a silver lake,
Or a lily you touch with your oar,
Or the sound of the winds and waves that break
In melody on the shore.

But as long as white wings come and go,
Or drift in the rosy dawn,
While memory comes with refluent flow,
It's true as ever it was, I know,
That love lives on and on.

THE NEW TENANT.

"NOW Mary, I have spoken!" Mr. Peel threw himself back in the chair as if that settled the matter once for all.

"I heard you, dear," sweetly responded Mrs. Peel, "and now listen to me. I have accepted Herr Schmidt's offer, and he will enter the adjoining house as tenant tomorrow."

"Not if I know it, madam!" shouted Phineas, jumping from his chair and bringing his fist down on the table. "Do you think I am going to have Rhyd cottage turned into a menagerie and my garden into a howling wilderness? The house may remain tenantless forever, but Herr Schmidt and his monstrosities shall not enter there."

"Herr Schmidt, my dear, is merely a naturalist."

"I know it," stormed Phineas. "I've heard of these plaguey naturalists before. I've no desire to come down stairs some fine morning to find a ringtailed monkey sitting on the window sill acting as referee while the kangaroos and crocodiles play leapfrog over the flower-beds. No, madam, no naturalists for Phineas Peel."

Pretty Mrs. Peel never allowed her temper to get the better of her. She laughed softly at her husband's fears, and did not alter her determination in the least.

"Has it slipped your memory, Phineas," she asked, "that Rhyd cottage is a portion of my property? If I choose to let it to a naturalist, even though he be a foreigner, I am perfectly justified in doing so.

This was true enough, and Phineas calmed down.

"Herr Schmidt's collection of 'monstrosities,' as you call it," went on Mrs. Peel, "probably contains nothing more dangerous than a death's head moth in a bottle. Anyhow, I have no intention to disappoint him."

"But I——"

"You will treat him with the respect due from one gentleman to another, Phineas," broke in Mrs. Peel. "And now, dear, we'll dismiss the subject."

Phineas Peel was—though at times he doubted it—a lucky fellow. He had carried off a young and handsome woman from a host of suitors.

Why Mary Marsden had chosen to bestow her hand and fortune on such a plain, everyday sort of fellow as the diminutive Phineas Peel was always a mystery to her acquaintances. The wedding was an accomplished fact before her relatives had recovered from the shock caused by the announcement of her engagement.

Mary appeared to be happy enough too. Phineas, taken as a whole, was not a bad sort of fellow. He was jealous, that was true, but his wife came to regard that as an extra proof of his devotion.

Had the proposed tenant of Rhyd cottage been an aged, decrepit, broken-down old man, Phineas would have stretched out the right hand of fellowship. But, alas! Herr Schmidt was young and handsome—far too handsome, Phineas thought.

"Very well, Mary," said Phineas, taking his hat from the peg and making for the door; "you have overruled me as usual and must be prepared for the consequences. In less than a week we shall have the house and garden overrun with every conceivable variety of reptile, from the beastly lizard to the boa constrictor."

And Phineas stalked indignantly forth with the merry laughter of his wife ringing in his ears.

* * * * * * *

A month or more had passed, and so far the fears of Phineas had proved to be groundless. Herr Schmidt's "monstrosities" had been kept well within bounds, and as yet Mr. Peel had not seen so much as a strange caterpillar in his garden, which never looked better.

However, he was not happy. He had taken an aversion to the new tenant from the first, and would never be satisfied until he had got rid of him.

"Confound that fellow," muttered Phineas one evening as he sat on an upturned bucket behind the pea sticks. "He's prowling about on the other side of the hedge again. Hope he won't catch sight of me, for I'm about tired of his oily tongue and eternal smile. Hello! What the deuce is the meaning of this?"

Down the garden path tripped Mrs. Peel. The naturalist was evidently expecting her and greeted her with a smile that almost brought tears into the eyes of the furious Phineas.

"Goot efening," he said. "You vos joost a leetle late."

It was soon evident that this was not the first chat indulged in over the boundary hedge. Though Phineas strained his ears, he could not catch the drift of the conversation. Like a flash he remembered that Mary had often of late taken a stroll in the garden at dusk. Was this the explanation?

Phineas had been glaring at the couple from behind the pea sticks for ten minutes or so when he saw his wife take a rosebud from his favorite tree and hand it over the hedge with a charming smile to the delighted Herr Schmidt. Then, with a pleasant "Good night!" Mrs. Peel tripped lightly into the house.

"You villain!" hissed Phineas savagely, jumping from his seat and shaking his fist after the retreating figure in the next garden. "I'll pay you out for this."

The rage of Mr. Peel was something to be remembered. Nothing but blood, he vowed, would obliterate his wrongs. But he would be cautious. He would smile and smile, and murder while he smiled. Seizing a pea stick, he tragically buried it in the heart of an unoffending cabbage, and played havoc with a stately row of sunflowers.

Half an hour later Mary saw him take down a huge old-fashioned duck gun from the hook in the hall.

"There's a German vulture in the neighborhood," he volunteered impressively, "and I'm going to bag him at the first opportunity."

However, as nothing short of an earthquake would have induced the old gun to go off in any circumstances—and Phineas had made assurances doubly sure by dropping in the shot first and powder afterward—the "vulture" in question was not likely to be seriously damaged, and Mary contented herself with expressing a hope that her husband would not hurt himself.

On the following evening, Phineas took up his old position in the garden with murder in his heart. Herr Schmidt, however, did not put in an appearance. After waiting some time, Phineas reentered the house and reared his duck gun up in the hall in a conspicuous position.

He had almost decided to run up to town and consult his brother John, the detective, with a view to having the movements of Herr Schmidt watched, when he was startled by the click of the letter box.

A scrap of paper lay on the mat. Picking it up, Phineas glanced at it, turned deadly pale, then hurried into the garden. Scribbled in lead pencil on dirty paper was the following:

"Peel has discovered everything. We have not a moment to lose, and must clear out to-night. The front door is unsafe. Will meet you at the back—10:30 sharp."

"There was no signature.

"Good gracious!" ejaculated Phineas after reading the note for the third time. I'd no idea matters had gone so far. "Oh, yes, Mr. Schmidt," he added grimly, "I'll meet you at 10:30 sharp."

* * * * * * *

It was about 10:45 and raining heavily. Phineas Peel, seated on a wall overlooking the back of Rhyd cottage, with his duck gun laid across his knees, was beginning to feel uncomfortable.

"The note said 10:30," he muttered. "It must be after that time now. What's that?"

Phineas had caught the sound of heavy feet moving cautiously over the gravel. He grasped his gun and peered into the gloom, but could distinguish nothing.

Suddenly he heard voices, evidently at the front of the house. He was about to quit his place under the impression that Herr Schmidt was leaving by the front door after all, when one of the back windows was cautiously raised and the lithe form of the naturalist dropped lightly to the ground.

Creeping along the side of the wall on which Phineas lay he presented an excellent mark. Mr. Peel, however, could not bring himself to shoot a man down in cold blood. He would give him a chance.

"Stop, you scoundrel!" he shouted.

The effect of the challenge was scarcely what Phineas had anticipated. Herr Schmidt darted forward and seized the barrel of the gun.

He was much the stronger of the two and Phineas was pulled from the wall in a twinkling. Lying on the broad of his back on the gravel in a half dazed condition he saw the tall form of Schmidt standing over him with the gun raised.

"Keep your tongue still, you fool," he hissed, "or I'll brain you. Now—quick—help me over the wall."

Phineas hesitated, but the threatening attitude of the other induced him to rise. However, he had no intention of giving in.

Obeying his instructions he caught hold of Schmidt's foot to give him "a leg up." Before the naturalist could grip the top of the wall, however, Phineas saw his opportunity.

Bracing himself for the effort, he exerted all his strength and pulled Schmidt bodily from the wall. He fell flat on his face, and before he could recover himself Phineas jumped on his back and seized him round the throat, emitting a yell that would have done infinite credit to a Sioux Indian.

The next moment Phineas was dragged off from behind and found himself in the clutches of a burly member of the local police force.

Four or five others seized Schmidt, who struggled in vain to free himself.

"What am I arrested for?" gasped Phineas. "There's your man!"

Phineas would no doubt have been led off with the other prisoner, but for the timely arrival on the scene of the last person in the world he had expected to see—his brother John!

"Here! What on earth is the meaning of all this?" he demanded when, as the result of John Peel's interference, he found himself free.

John stayed behind a minute or two to explain that Herr Schmidt, the "naturalist," and Edward Harper, the notorious forger who had defied New Scotland Yard for the past six weeks, were one and the same.

"It was a sharp dodge of Harper's," said John Peel, "and he might have got clear away but for that clever wife of yours, Phineas. Mary suspected the man from the first and supplied me from time to time with valuable information. It is to her entirely that the credit of the capture is due. Tell her I'll call round and thank her myself tomorrow. By the by, the gang of which he was the head got wind of our intentions, and a man was dispatched with a warning. Harper doesn't appear to have received it."

Then Phineas began to understand things a little more clearly.

"I suppose this will be it," he remarked, producing the note and handing it to his brother. "You see, the messenger left it at the wrong door, and I—er—I thought I might as well see the fun."

For some little time after Phineas was of the opinion that he had made a fool of himself. Lately, however, he has taken a different view of the matter and is never tired of relating how he literally "dropped on" Harper, the forger, alias Schmidt, the naturalist, next door.—Cassell's Saturday Journal.

IN REGARD TO MEN.

John Howells, son of the novelist, William Dean Howells, recently received a diploma in architecture from a Paris institution, where he had been a student five years.

Brigands in the Roman Campagna have no luck; they held up Prince Francesco Borghese, Duke of Bomarzo, and his agent recently, but the two had only $7 between them. Two years ago, when the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen was robbed, he had just $10 on his person.

Verestchagin, the Russian battle painter, will be the first recipient of the Nobel prize. Given for "the propagation of pacific ideas," it is said, as his pictures have brought out the true horrors of war. Kaiser Wilhelm calls them "the best assurance against war."

It is reported that Verdi has intrusted to his friend, Boito, a box containing the score of a new opera, entirely completed, but that the box is not to be opened, nor its contents investigated, until after the Italian composer's death.

In a recent interview Jean de Reszke told a funny story of how his brother Edouard went to sleep during the "Meistersinger" at Bayreuth, and how he had to vigorously shake him to make him stop the strange sounds which were scandalizing the audience.

Max Haddad, who now lives in retirement in Worcester, Mass., was formerly a favorite jockey of the King of Roumania. His Majesty had the ambition to have in his bodyguard of skilled riders men of nearly every nation of the world. Haddad, a Syrian by birth, was one of these. The seventeen riders always accompanied the King on his official tours about Galatz.

Effect of Coffee on the Nerves.

The impression prevails in many minds that coffee is extremely injurious to the nerves and also to the liver. How true this may be it is not easy to decide. Normal constitutions do not, as a rule, seem to find coffee in moderation in the least degree injurious. Dyspeptics may experience distress from its use, but according to some carefully-conducted experiments, it is quite as likely to be the sugar and cream in the coffee as the coffee itself. Persons who have been in the habit of taking coffee prepared in the usual fashion and have found it to disagree with them have tried black coffee without sugar or cream with most excellent results. From which it may appear that the caffeine may not be so injurious after all; indeed, it has of late been used in cases of myocarditis with excellent effect. Small doses of caffeine are recommended, and these at intervals, the remedy being given steadily, then discontinued for a while. In this way the system does not become accustomed to the medicine and it is not necessary to increase the dose of the drug.

Forged a Check to Buy a Bible.

Several days ago one of the Cincinnati banks discovered that a check drawn in favor of the Methodist Book Concern, which had been deposited by it and gone through the clearing house in regular form, was a forged one. As the check, however, was only for $5, instead of sending it back to the clearing bank the teller took it to the Methodist Book Concern and told them it was a forgery. After looking at it carefully in a thoughtful manner the head of the firm said that the man purchased a Bible with that check.

THE NEW ELDORADO

THE GOLD FIELDS OF ALASKA AND THE YUKON.

Geography, Climate and Resources of the Now Famous Region of the Far North—Great Extent of Ground to Be Prospected.

Special Correspondence.]

Purchased from Russia in 1867 for $7,200,000, Alaska was a portion of the United States for 30 years without attracting the attention its resources and wealth merit. Everywhere apathy and ignorance preaviled in regard to this latest territorial acquisition. Suddenly this was changed. In a single day the eyes of the entire world were turned to Klondike, and there they remain fixed. On the 17th of last July the steamer Portland sailed into port with $800,000 of gold on board, and to the ends of the earth was telegraphed the story of the rich placer diggings discovered along the Klondike and its tributaries. Then began that rush to the new mines which has filled the news columns of the press with its varied experiences for four months. Ten thousand men joined in it. Some are now at the mines; others are scattered all along the trails from the coast to the Klondike; still others are at Juneau, Dyea and Skaguay, awaiting a more favorable time for the journey, while not a few have returned to civilization, satisfied with their experience or to make a fresh start under better circumstances. Great and exciting as was this first rush, it was but the advance ripple of the great wave of gold hunters that will roll in upon the Alaskan coast the coming spring. Probably not less than 50,000 men will start for the Yukon next year, and possibly four times this number may go. For this reason a clear and succinct description of Alaska and its resources, with a brief review of its routes of travel must be of interest even to those who have no intention of seeking the northern wilderness.

In the first place, it must be understood that the Yukon river flows partly through Canada and partly through the United States, and that the Klondike region is on the Canadian side of the boundary line, though good placers, possibly as good as those of the Klondike, exist on the American side of the line. Beginning at the Arctic ocean, the boundary line runs due south along the 141st meridian as far as Mt. St. Elias, 10 marine leagues from the Pacific, whence it follows the coast line, preserving a distance of 10 marine leagues from it, in a southeasterly direction to the latitude of 54 degrees and 40 minutes, which becomes the southern limit. All east of that line belongs to Canada, part being in the Northwest Territory and part in the province of British Columbia, the dividing line running east and west across both lakes Bennett and Teslin. The present gold discoveries are all north of the British Columbia line, but no one can tell what may be revealed in the future.

That portion west of the boundary line and belonging to the United States constitutes Alaska proper, and contains a total area of 617,703 square miles, of which 37,596 square miles consist of islands along the coast. It is only on these islands and a narrow strip of the adjacent mainland that settlements have been made and industries developed, except the gradual development of gold placers along the Yukon, ending with the recent startling discoveries. The towns of Alaska consist of but half a dozen of any prominence, besides the new places on the Yukon. They are Sitka, the capital, Juneau, Wrangel, New Metlakahtla, Kodiak and Dutch Harbor. Sitka is on Baranoff island, off the southeast coast, and has a population of about 500. Juneau is on the mainland, about 100 miles further north. It is the chief commercial city and during the winter season its population exceeds 3,000. New Metlakahtla is a mission and trading point near the southern extremity, and Wrangel is a trading point on the coast at the mouth of Stickeen river. Kodiak is on the island of the same name south of the Alaskan peninsula, and is the seat of the salmon packing industry. Dutch Harbor is on the island of Unalaska, one of the Aleutian group, where vessels pass from the Pacific into Behring sea.

Alaska is a region of mountains, there being no great valleys nor plains. Along the coast a high range of mountains rises almost abruptly from the water's edge, deeply indented with long arms of the sea. These present a series of Alpine peaks of the most picturesque description, the highest being the Fairweather alps, exceeding 15,000 feet, St. Elias and Logan exceeding 18,000 feet, and Wrangel, further to the northwest, said to be still higher. Down the canyons of these coast mountains many tremendous living glaciers flow steadily to the ocean, filling the bays and inlets with great masses of floating ice. Beyond this coast range the mountains are lower, but almost continuous as far north as the Arctic, and as far east as the great plains of Mackenzie river region. Yet there are many fine mountain valleys, with occasional stretches of rolling table land, in summer time brilliant with a carpet of grass, mosses and flowers.

The coast mountains divide the climate of Alaska into two distinct classes. A branch of the warm Japan current skirts the coast, its influence modifying the climate of the islands and adjacent mainland. The average temperature for July at Sitka is but 55 degrees, while the mean winter temperature is as high as 32 degrees. This is the most equable climate in the United States. The same causes produce copious rains or continuous drizzles, there being but an average of 66 clear days in a year. Across the summit of the coast range conditions are very different. The rains are cut off by the high mountains, and the warm ocean air is not felt. From November to April the mean temperature remains continuously below the freezing point, often remaining for weeks at a time below zero and occasionally going as low as 60 or 70 degrees below zero. It snows about one-third of the time in winter, but the snow does not become excessively deep, though frequently the storms are very severe.

The mean temperature of the interior during the summer months is 60 to 70 degrees, there being many very warm days. The Yukon region, being so far north, has the long summer days and long winter nights of that latitude, though, being south of the Arctic circle, it just misses the continuous day and continuous night of the Arctic summer and winter.

Aside from gold, the chief resources of Alaska are timber, fish and fur-bearing animals, including the famous fur seals which are giving the United States, Great Britain, Russia and Japan so much trouble. Salmon are plentiful in all the streams of the islands and mainland, and millions are annually packed for market. Halibut and cod, herring and smelt, or oolachon, abound and have become of great commercial importance. The seal and sea otter in the water, and the fox, bear, lynx, otter, beaver, etc., on land, contribute thousands of their skins annually to the world's fur supply. The fur trade is handled by the Alaska Commercial Company and the Northwest Trading and Transportation Company, both of which have headquarters on St. Michaels island, near the mouth of the Yukon, while the Hudson's Bay Company operates on the Canadian side of the line.

Coal and coal oil have both been discovered and may be of future value. The timber of the coast and islands grows very large, owing to the humid atmosphere. It is chiefly cedar, spruce and hemlock. It has been little used thus far, though several small mills have cut it for local purposes. The timber of the interior is much smaller, and is found only along the lakes and water courses. It is chiefly spruce, alder, cottonwood and willow. Several small mills have been taken in for cutting this timber. Agriculture is as yet an experiment, but little having been attempted. Conditions on the islands are favorable for grass and such vegetables and cereals as mature quickly. Even along the Yukon region summer vegetables may be grown and possibly wheat. A few years will show what can be done in agriculture and stock raising.

The great interest in Alaska at the present time centers in the Yukon placers on both sides of the boundary line. Prospecting on the Yukon began in 1881. In the fall of 1883 the first gold was brought to Juneau from the interior. The next year 300 men crossed the mountains and the number of miners steadily increased each year. The first work was on Stewart river and then Big Salmon, both in Canada. In 1886 the Forty-Mile creek placers, also in Canada, were discovered, and the next year the famous Franklin gulch, on the same stream. In 1892 the Miller creek diggings were found, also a tributary of Forty-Mile, and on the Canadian side of the line. The next year there was a large influx of miners, fully 300 working in the Forty-Mile district.

In 1893 the first important discoveries on the American side of the line were made on Birch creek, and the town of Circle City, now having 500 log houses, was started on the Yukon as a supply point. The next year over $400,000 were taken out along Birch creek and Forty-Mile. In 1895 Eagle and Porcupine creeks began to produce in the Birch creek district. The total output of that year exceeded $700,000. In August, 1896, it was reported at Forty-Mile and Circle City that wonderfully rich placers had been discovered on the Klondike, a small tributary of the Yukon entering that river about 50 miles southeast of the international boundary and on Canadian territory. There was a great rush to the new diggings, the older ones being nearly deserted. In a few days $1,000 were taken out on Bonanza creek, a tributary of the Klondike. By January 1, 1897, 400 claims had been located on Bonanza and Eldorado creeks, and 200 on Hunker creek, and later many others on Bear, Gold Bottom and Too-Much-Gold creeks and their tributaries. Fully $1,400,000 were taken from the Yukon placers in 1896.

It was not so much the amount of gold brought out by the first steamer to come down last summer, as the news that this was the result of but a little work in a few claims only, and that there would have been many times as much had the hundreds of other claims been worked in time to send the gold out, which caused the excitement. The method of working these mines is to sink a shaft into the frozen ground in winter, taking out the rich gravel near bed-rock and piling it up to be washed out when the water runs in summer time. For this reason the gold washed out last summer could not be sent away, and will not be brought down until next July, when it is expected that several millions of dollars will come out as the result of the first year's work along the Klondike. The commercial point for the Klondike district is the new town of Dawson City, situated on the Yukon just below the mouth of the Klondike and reached by river steamers.

The Yukon gold fields extend for a thousand miles along the stream, with a width of 500 miles. In this vast area there are hundreds of streams and gulches, offering ample room for the thousands of gold seekers to prospect for new diggings. The new discoveries reported this year are on Dominion creek and on the tributaries of the Stewart river, on the Canadian side, and on Munnook creek and its tributaries on the Alaska side, near the mouth of the latter the new town of Rampart City having sprung up.

The Wheelbarrow.

The village resident soon comes to find the wheelbarrow a very indispensable article. The cut, which is from the American Agriculturist, shows how one village resident extemporizes a hay rack out of his wheelbarrow when desiring to get into the stable two or three hundred pounds or so of hay. Narrow strips of board are lightly tacked to the surface, as shown, and the hay cart is ready. It will surprise anyone to see the large quantity of hay that one can thus easily and quickly wheel away from his grounds to the stable. This arrangement is also useful for getting in fodder corn from the garden. Let the stalks first be piled cross-ways of the bottom strips. Then the other way.

Supplementing Ensilage.

There are all kinds of ensilage, varying, of course, with the material put into the silo. There is no magic in the silo to add to the nutrition of what is put into it, though it may add to the nutritive value by making it more digestible. Much of the ensilage from corn fodder is deficient in nitrogenous forms of nutrition. It needs to be supplemented, not necessarily with richer ensilage, but preferably with dry food. Instead of trying to ensilage clover, which is difficult because it heats so rapidly, it is better to cure it and feed three to five pounds of good clover hay to all animals whose main ration is corn ensilage. If clover cannot be had, use wheat bran or oats. Both linseed meal and cotton-seed meal may be given with good results to animals fed on corn ensilage. If possible some straw or hay should be given with these to increase their bulk and prevent them from compacting in the stomach. Corn is not a good supplement to corn ensilage, as it also is so largely carbonaceous. But corn and oats ground together and fed with cut hay or stray make a very good supplementary feed.

For Apple Choking.

The treatment for apple choking outlined and illustrated is said by a correspondent of the Orange Judd Farmer to prove effectual and never cause injury. Fig. 1 is made of ⅜-inch round iron, the ends being 5 inches apart, the frame 12 inches in length from the small loops at the end to the handle. The ring near the center is 3 by 5 inches welded to the side pieces. Put a small cord through the end loops, slip the ring into the cow's mouth and fasten the cord over the head. Turn the handle down under the jaw, which will open the mouth, and the cow can then be held without further trouble. If the apple is not far down, it can be removed with the hand. The cow cannot bite or throw her head around if the handle is held firm. If the apple is too far down to remove by hand, take a rubber hose, Fig. 2, start through the ring and push the apple clear down into the stomach.

FIG. 1. FIG. 2.

Farm More Intensively.

Experience and necessity force changes in methods that would not occur but for the failure to secure profit where no difficulty previously existed. In England, where the system of farming is on the intensive plan, dairymen are abandoning pasture. They are discovering that more food can be grown on the pasture land than can be secured from the grass and hay, and that by a succession of green crops they can derive better foods than can be had from grass. There is more labor required, but the products are larger and the profits greatly increased. Root crops and soiling enable the English to pay high rents, and the methods they adopt are the result of years of experience. In this country dairymen will find it to their advantage to grow green food as well as grass, and utilize roots as well also, as a protection against drought and unfavorable conditions. To meet low prices for farm products the crops on every acre must be larger and also utilized in the best manner.

Storing Roots in Pits.

The proper way to keep all roots is in out-of-door pits, and as much as possible excluding air from them. Some kinds of roots, as turnips, rutabagas and carrots, do not easily freeze, but all are injured by exposure to the air. When we grow potatoes largely we always stored most of what were not sold in the fall in pits. This is especially important for the potatoes required for seed. While the ground was still frozen we covered the potato heaps with straw, so as to keep it frozen as long as possible. Potatoes that can be kept from sprouting until planting time produce much the best crops.—Exchange.

Care of Grain Drills.

The grain drill is quite too expensive to be allowed to remain out of doors exposed to the weather when not in use. It should be carefully cleaned from all dirt, and those especially with a fertilizer attachment should be scoured to take off the rust from use, and then coated with grease to prevent the air from getting to the metal. Most grain drills rust out rather than wear out. They are used, even where fall grain is sown, only a few days in the spring and fall, and ought to last a lifetime with few repairs, if they are properly sheltered when not in use.

Feeding for Milk.

Feeding the cows to increase the flow of milk should not entail additional expense if the farmer uses judgment in proportioning the various foods. If grain, linseed meal and other concentrated foods are given in excess, the digestion may be impaired, and if hay is mostly given the animals will be compelled to eat large quantities of it to secure the desired nourishment. Foods should consist of both concentrated and bulky substances, regulating the proportions according to the conditions and circumstances.

Exercise for Cows.

The cow which is bearing young or giving milk is not naturally a frisky animal. We never believed that she required much exercise. Most times when we have turned them out while cleaning their stables, instead of running about, the cow will be seen cuddled close to the stack to shelter herself from cold winds. It is still worse when rain is falling. The cow then needs shelter rather than exercise, and can keep warm standing still in her stable better than she can while water is being evaporated from her skin.—American Cultivator.

Securing Early Lettuce.

The outdoor crop of spring lettuce may be made several days earlier by sowing the seed in some sheltered place late in fall. It is not likely that if sown now any of the lettuce will come up this fall. A few leaves scattered over the bed will keep the seed from injury, and it will sprout and grow with the first warm weather in spring. Almost every one has seen self-sown lettuce on the beds where it was grown and went to seed the previous year. It is much more forward than spring-sown lettuce can be had in the same locality.

Banish the Curry-Comb.

The curry-comb is an instrument of torture that should be banished. In some stables a great improvement upon it is a large wisp of straw, twisted tight, tied into a knot, and pounded flat on one side. The flat side is used in grooming, after being slightly dampened. It is much better for the skin and hair than the curry-comb, removes dust well, and gives the animal a glossy, healthy coat. Brisk rubbing with soft woolen cloths is excellent for giving the hair a silky, glossy appearance, and is an excellent thing for the skin.

Fall-Planted Trees.

As fall rains are coming on some care is needed to trees lately planted. Very often the earth used to fill around the trunk sinks away, leaving a hollow, which carries the rains down among the roots. As these in newly planted trees are dormant during winter, this water does them much injury. It is always best to draw up earth around newly planted trees. This is a protection against attacks of mice if the earth is closely compacted. The earth should be pulled away from the trees in the spring.

Grain Cheaper than Hay.

If given with enough hay or straw or cornstalks to distend the stomach, grain is better feed than hay, because more easily digested. In the coarser fodder so much of the nutrition goes to sustain animal heat or the processes of digestion, that comparatively little is left to make flesh or milk or fats. The knowledge that some grain with hay makes cheaper nutrition is not half so widely extended as it ought to be. If it were, there would be a better demand for grain, and it would sell at better prices.

Plant Watering.

Watering is the most important operation in connection with plant growth. Plants grown in rooms are benefited by an immersion in water at the same temperature as the room for about ten minutes once a week. Water should never be given before needed, neither should plants be allowed to become surface-watered. Rain-water is the best for all purposes. The best time for watering plants during summer is the evening, but in winter morning should be chosen for the work.

Supplies of Horse Radish.

Any one who has even a small piece of ground may keep supplied with horse radish. Once planted it is not easily eradicated, and there is more likelihood that there will be too much of it rather than too little. It is good from the time its leaves are cut by frost until the new shoots put forth in spring. It is hard digging frozen ground, so a supply for home use should be dug each fall. It is much better and stronger if grated just before it is to be used.

Fall Plowing in Ridges.

If land without sod is fall plowed it should be in ridges, with a dead furrow so placed that it will carry off the water. Otherwise the fall plowing may leave the land so wet that it will take a long time in spring before teams and harrows can be put on it.

ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JANUARY 14 1898

A Los Angeles exchange says: There continues to be more mystery than anything else about the Johannesburg Railway Company's plans. Attorney Rose of the company was seen this morning and asked about the story that the road would be built to a connection with the Carson & Colorado Railway at Keeler. He would not deny the possibility of such a move, but all that he would say about it was that if anything of the kind was consemplated he did not know of it. E. Van Etten, the General Manager of the New York Central, who was here as one of the owners of the Johannesburg road, has gone to San Francisco, where he will remain until the first of next week, when he will return to meet President Beckley of the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo road, who is also an owner. It is expected that some announcement will be made that will throw some light on the plans of these magnates, who seem to be spending a great amount of their valuable time in looking after a matter of twenty-eight miles of track out on the Mojave Desert.

The year just closed has been the best in California, in a mining way, for nearly two decades. The output of mineral wealth has been greater than in any year in three decades, save 1880, when the yield of gold was about the same as in 1897. But the chief value of the mining operations of 1897 lies in the foundation which they have laid for future developments and an increased output in the present year and in the years to come. This foundation consists of the vast amount of prospecting and preliminary work that has been started. Never before in the history of quartz mining in California has this kind of development work been conducted on so extensive a scale as during the past year. Miners have ventured deeper into the bowels of the earth to explore the great lodes for their hidden wealth—deeper than they ever ventured before, and the result has been in most instances the exposure of masses of high-grade ore that it will take years of greatest activity in mine and mill to extract and reduce, thus insuring these many years, at least, of mining prosperity, without regard to what future explorations of the great gold bearing lodes may reveal. The year has also revealed some mining surprises. Mines have been reopened, which in early days had been abandoned as presumably worthless, and trifling exploration under modern methods and mining appliances has shown that they were properties of the greatest value and prospectively permanently so. Then, again, some counties that have heretofore cut only a minor figure as mineral producers have jumped during 1897 to the front. Some of the southern counties have distinguished themselves in 1897 as mineral producers. Shasta pushes to the front with a yield of gold, silver and copper worth over $4,500,000, overshadowing all those counties which have hitherto figured as the leading mineral producers of the State. The year 1897 has no doubt yielded at least $20,000,000 in gold. It scarcely needs the gift of prophecy to predict that the year 1898 will show an output of at least $25,000,000.

Pension Frauds.

There is no question that if the present Congress does not undertake the work of making a thorough investigation into the Pension Bureau, some subsequent Congress will have to do so. The abuses that exist in the Pension Office are undoubtedly most stupendous. In 1889, twenty-four years after the close of the rebellion, the total annual expenditure for pensions was $88,275,000. At that time, it has been estimated, there were not in the country over 400,000 persons who had participated actively in the War of the Rebellion. In the ordinary course of nature, half at least of these veterans should have disappeared from the pension rolls within the next ten years; yet, instead of doing so, the expenditures of the government for pensions has nearly doubled. Last year the amount paid was $139,949,000. The total amount expended to date, beginning with 1861, has been $2,137,464,000, which is more than one-half the cost of the war in which these pensioners are supposed to have been injured.

A recent dispatch from Washington states that the imminence of an investigation has greatly alarmed the clerks of the Pension Bureau. Many of them are said to be drawing salaries and pensions together, and an investigation would result in cutting off either the salary or the pension. But the abuses which exist in the immediate vicinity of the bureau cannot approach those which would be discovered in remoter parts of the country. Undoubtedly thousands of men are being carried who never smelled powder in the war; other thousands of widow are undoubtedly drawing money for men who either never existed or never were in active service.

It is the duty of the Government to provide for those who saved from destruction. There is no stronger incentive to the cultivation of patriotism than a feeling that the Government which a man fights for remembers him in his old age and adversity. But this thing of pensioning sutlers, cooks, teamsters, recruiting agents and others who might have helped along the war without personal risk, brings the entire system into contempt. A nation which tolerates such a method of pensioning ought to be the laughing stock of the world.

If Congress should take hold of the pension business and subject the system to a thorough investigation, it would undoubtedly discover that millions of public money is annually paid out for the benefit of men who are no more entitled to it than any private citizen who viewed the Rebellion from afar.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 14.....1898

Henry Mack returned from Los Angeles Tuesday.

Miss Birdie Levy will arrive home next week for a short visit.

County Clerk Hession went to Big Pine yesterday, returning today.

J. W. Murphy is refitting the old artesian well-boring machine for use at the Salt Wells borax works.

Lost—Light sorrel mare, branded with Birchim iron. Liberal reward for her return. H. LEVY.

N. E. Conklin has started for Bakersfield with a band of sheep. He will camp down about the head of the lake tonight.

The F. & A. M. installation, which was to have taken place last Saturday evening, has been postponed till next regular meeting.

Pygmalion & Galatea will be rendered at Lone Pine tomorrow evening. The cast in unexcelled, and with excellent stage-fittings the affair will be well worth seeing.

Dr. J. S. McQueen arrived at Independence last Friday, and has opened dental parlors at the Norman House. Call and make an early date, as his stay will be short.

Messrs. Newman and Brown arrived from Los Angeles last Tuesday and have commenced operations at Mazourka canyon. They have ordered necessary lumber and will commence tunneling.

A dispatch from Manti, Utah, under date of December 30 says that Actor Stuttz of the Stuttz Theater Company was badly burned and his wife probably fatally burned this afternoon. Stuttz was preparing colored fireworks in his room, to be used in the play, when by accident a spark, from the stove set the explosive on fire, and they could escape from their room.

Sadly Hurt.

Dr. Woodin was telegraphed for on Wednesday to go to Lone Pine to attend Charley Green. It seems that the two Johnson boys and a young man named Stokes got into a row with Green and lassoed and dragged him. To finish the job they struck him a number of blows on the head with a loaded quirt, producing concussion of the brain. At last reports he was in a critical condition. The young men left the country and no arrests have been made.

Fire at Keeler.

A disastrous conflagration occurred at Keeler last Saturday afternoon. The fire started in the Gehrig building, immediately south of Fichman's store, and before it was stopped the entire block was wiped out. Fichman's store and hotel and the Lakeview hotel and lodging house, with stable and corrals, owned by Thos. Boland, were entirely destroyed. Mr. Boland has opened a lodging house in the old Gray building, and travelers can secure accommodation. It is reported that all the parties except Gehrig will rebuild. Fichman's insurance is reported at $5700 and Boland's at $2500. Gehrig was uninsured.

NEWSY NOTES FROM BIG PINE.

BIG PINE, Jan. 12, 1898.

ED. INDEPENDENT:—The mountainward trend of the hamlet is still on. Comrade J. E. McConnel has just completed a neat cottage southwest of the church, but the veteran "sojer" of the Grand Army denies that this incident indicates his desertion from the ranks of the stern bachelor battallion.

Henry Bell's new house is nearly completed and will soon be ready for warming.

Capt. Jim Wallace of the wood schooner "Betsy Jane" met with with a painful accident while unloading at Port Alvord on Monday eve, while struggling with a butt-cut of a venerable pine, his foot slipped and falling from the deck, he fractured one of the digits of the right hand. Owing to the excessive pain, Dr. Middleton administered chloroform while setting the injured member. The The sufferer is improving rapidly.

J. C. Curran, an early California pioneer, better known in Nevada as "Farmer John," is quite ill at the residence of R. K. Love.

E. A. Crocker of the Uhlmeyer addition says "it is a boy, it is," and he wears the honors of paternity with becoming dignity.

The Big Pine School Baseball Club have accepted the challenge of the kids of Bishop and will do a game with them at Bishop February 22d.

"Truthful George's" birthday will be honored at this place by a hop.

Sam Piper has exchanged a herd of stock cattle for the Turner ranch and will soon take the place of Hargrath brothers and become a citizen of California.

The deal given Treasurer Bunney's son by the Lyon County Times is heartily condemned by the people of the hamlet.

There is a fair-sized rumor here that the ornamental marble for the postoffice at Frisco will be furnished by the Inyo quarry.

Parties in from Pigeon Springs report things O. K. in that camp. A late cleanup shows that the ore will work at a profit and the miners will receive their pay.

The political pot has commenced to simmer a little, and aspirants are showing on the surface of aforesaid vessel.

CRYING AS A SAFETY VALVE.

Scientific Declaration That "a Good Cry" Is Beneficial.

The Hospital declares that the popular belief that "a good cry" gives at times a salutary relief has a good scientific foundation. A writer on that subject says:

"Crying is so commonly associated with distress that man's natural instinct is to put a stop to it as soon as possible. We should not forget, however, that it has its uses. Dr. Harry Campbell has recently shown how complex are the phenomena involved in 'a good cry.' This does not consist merely in the shedding of tears, but includes so general and widespread an action of the muscles that the whole body may be convulsed. In children also a great change takes place during crying in the manner in which the respiration is carried on. Expirations are prolonged sometimes for as much as half a minute and are interrupted by short inspirations. During expiration the glottis is contracted so that the intrapulmonary pressure rises considerably, and there can be but little doubt that it is the equal distribution of this increased air pressure throughout the whole of the chest, leading to the dilatation of portions of the lungs that have become more or less collapsed, that is the explanation of the great benefit which often results from crying in cases of infantile bronchitis and of the large discharge of bronchial mucus which so often follows. Children may become very blue during the paroxysm, but the deep respirations which succeed quickly restore the circulation to a better condition than before in consequence of the larger lung space rendered available. In women the beneficial effect of a good cry is proverbial. In them also this is partly due to the increased depth of respiration and the improvement in the often languid circulation thereby induced, but to a large extent it is the result of the muscular exercise involved, by which the general vascular tension, and especially the blood pressure in the brain, are much reduced. The profuse flow of tears no doubt also acts strongly on the cerebral circulation in still further reducing tension. The sobbing movements, again, have a good influence upon the venous circulation in the abdominal and pelvic viscera, while the exhaustion produced tends to produce sleep and thus to give the nervous system its best chance of recuperation. We should not, then, too hastily intervene to stop a woman from having out her cry. If we can remove her trouble, by all means let us do so, but if the trouble is to remain, let her cry herself to sleep. This is far better than soothing drafts."

AN AFRICAN POISON STORY.

Strange Phenomenon Witnessed In the Northeast of the Dark Continent.

Charles M. Stern of Chicago, who returned to this city after a journey through northeast Africa, told of a curious meteorological phenomenon which he observed in a district called Gwallah. "The vegetation in that region is very luxuriant," said he, "and the plant life must give off an unusually large quantity of carbonic acid gas. At least that was the conclusion I reached after seeing three natives die and four or five dogs.

"The moment the animals put their noses close to the ground they would fall over and gasp and die in about five minutes. The natives who died slept on the ground instead of in hammocks, as others did. I saw hundreds of dead birds. My theory is that a stratum of the deadly gas covered the ground for a depth of three or four inches, and any living thing breathing in that area would be asphyxiated.

"I could not understand, however, how the gas was not distributed in a thinner layer and what kept it in one place for a whole day. Nothing like it had ever been known there before. The deaths of the men and the dogs all occurred within 24 hours. Then the gas, if it was really gas, seemed to dissipate. It was a very strange occurrence, and I might have been induced to make a more exhaustive investigation if my presence had not excited distrust. I got away as quickly as possible rather than be accused of being the cause of the sudden deaths. The natives are superstitious and attribute most of their misfortunes to witchcraft, so I thought it the part of wisdom to get away."—New York Mail and Express.

An Instance.

"Mere knowledge," said the prosy man, "is of little value."

"Now you hit it that time," said the listening young man with much earnestness. "I know what are exactly the correct things in clothes, but I ain't able to buy 'em."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MOTHERS.

We are asserting in the courts our right to the exclusive use of the word "CASTORIA," and "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," as our Trade Mark.

I, Dr. Samuel Pitcher, of Hyannis, Massachusetts, was the originator of "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," the same that has borne and does now bear the fac-simile signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on every wrapper. This is the original "PITCHER'S CASTORIA" which has been used in the homes of the mothers of America for over thirty years. Look Carefully at the wrapper and see that it is the kind you have always bought, and has the signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on the wrapper. No one has authority from me to use my name except The Centaur Company of which Chas. H. Fletcher is President.

ELIJAH P. LOVEJOY.

THE MONUMENT TO HIS MEMORY AT ALTON, ILL.

History of This Remarkable Man's Fight Against the Evils of Slavery—Thrilling Events that Culminated in His Assassination.

Died a Martyr.

Over sixty years ago, on the night of Nov. 7, 1837, Elijah P. Lovejoy was shot down in Alton, Ill., while with a few stanch friends he was defending his printing press against the blind fury of a pro-slavery mob. This is the incident upon which was based the appropriation of $25,000 by the Illinois Legislature for the erection in Alton of a monument to the memory of the martyr, the dedication of which took place on the recent anniversary of that famous tragedy.

The man whose brief career is thus commemorated in marble and bronze, Elijah Parish Lovejoy, was born at Albion, Kennebec, Me., Nov. 8, 1802. He was the eldest of a family of nine children, the son of a Congregational minister. The early years of his life were spent upon the little New England farm, and were distinguished only in his abnormal desire for knowledge. His spare time was always occupied in study, and by his own thrift he was enabled to enter the sophomore class in Waterville College in 1823, where he graduated with honor three years later. He then taught school a few years, but was seized with the mania for migration to the West, and landed in St. Louis in 1827. Here he began writing for the local press. His first newspaper work was done as an attache of the St. Louis Times, which advocated the election of Henry Clay to the Presidency. He had a seemingly brilliant opening here, but during a religious revival that followed the election he embraced the Presbyterian faith, and his purpose in life was suddenly changed. He entered the Princeton Theological Seminary in 1832, and was licensed to preach a year later by the Philadelphia Presbytery. Returning, however, to St. Louis, he was assisted by friends in the founding of a weekly newspaper, which he called the St. Louis Observer. The first number appeared Nov. 22, 1833.

The slavery question was then agitating the community, and it was impossible for a man of his positive convictions to keep still on such a vital subject. During the summer of 1834 he formally announced his opposition to the whole system of slavery, and thereby began his troubles. His editorials soon began to be talked about, yet they would read as very mild utterances today. They are significant also in that they prove that Lovejoy was not an abolitionist. He said in his own columns: "Gradual emancipation is the remedy we propose. This we look upon as the only feasible and, indeed, the only desirable way of effecting our freedom from the thralldom in which we are held. In the meantime the rights of all classes of our citizens should be respected, and the work conposed, carried on and finished as one in which all classes are alike interested, and in which all may be called upon to make sacrifices of individual interests to the general welfare of the community." On another occasion he said that emancipation should be effected "by the masters and no others." He hated slavery, but appreciated the position and feeling of the slaveholders, and frequently stated that it was a national and not a sectional evil. Yet even this line of argument was bitterly resented, and under date of Oct. 5, 1835, a letter was sent to him by a committee of St. Louis citizens commanding that he cease talking of slavery in his paper. He refused flatly and in an editorial said: "The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the inalienable rights of man, and any person may freely speak, write or print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty." In the closing paragraph he thus declared himself: "I do, therefore, as an American citizen and Christian patriot, in the name of liberty, law and religion, solemnly protest against all these attempts, however and by whomsoever made, to frown down the liberty of the press and forbid the free expression of opinion. Under a deep sense of my obligations to my country, the church and my God, I declare it to be my fixed purpose to submit to no dictation. And I am prepared to abide by the consequences. I have appealed to the Constitution and laws of my country; if they will fail to protect me I appeal to my God, and with Him I cheerfully rest my cause." This brought a request for Lovejoy to resign as editor of the Observer. He did so at once, but the paper was in debt and the stock was turned over to a Mr. Moore, who replaced him in charge, and they decided to bring the plant to Alton. This was reconsidered, however, and the paper continued. In April, 1836, a negro was lynched. The Observer denounced the lynching as a disgrace to the community, and when the judge of the local court quashed proceedings against members of the mob, characterizing the act as "beyond all human law," his action was in turn attacked as disgraceful and demoralizing. A few days later the Observer office was entered and the plant ruined. The press was not destroyed and was shipped on Sunday to Alton. The same night it was wrecked and dumped into the river. A public meeting followed in which the people promised to secure another outfit for the paper. The publication of the Observer was resumed Sept. 8, 1836. It was uninterrupted until the following August. Lovejoy wrote without intermission on the subject of slavery, and meantime continued his religious work, being moderator of the Alton Presbytery when he died.

The St. Louis opposition, however, soon manifested itself there, and on July 11, 1837, a public meeting protested against the course of the paper and appointed a committee to intercede with Lovejoy. He received the delegation politely, but in cold disdain of their mission. The trouble culminated as usual. The plant was totally destroyed on the night of Aug. 21. The same night a committee of vigilantes waylaid Lovejoy on a lonely road and informed him that they had decided he was a nuisance in the community and proposed to tar and feather and set him adrift on the river. He listened calmly, and then said: "Gentlemen, I am in your hands, with neither the power nor the disposition to resist. I have, however, one request to make. My wife is dangerously ill and I was on my way to town to have a prescription filled. If one of you will pledge his word to take it and have the medicine prepared and deliver it at my house without letting my wife know what has become of me you may do with me what you wish." There was profound silence for a moment, and then the leader said: "Boys, I can't touch him. He is too brave a man." And he was allowed to go in peace. On Sept. 21, another press arrived. It was destroyed the same night. Then Lovejoy thought of removing either to St. Charles, Mo., or to Quincy. But he was not disposed to run away from trouble, and on the advice of friends he remained and ordered a new press.

LOVEJOY'S DEATH SCENE.

In anticipation of its arrival another public meeting was held, with the object of persuading the editor to take a new course. Then it was that he made his dying declaration, which rings yet as the keynote of his life and of American independence: "But, gentlemen, as long as I am an American citizen, and as long as American blood runs in these veins, I shall hold myself at liberty to speak, to write, to publish whatever I please on any subject, being amenable to the laws of my country for the same." On Nov. 6 the fourth press arrived and was placed in the warehouse of Godfrey & Gilman. It was successfully defended that night by a committee who tendered their services to Mayor John M. Krum as a peace guard. On Nov. 7, they were there again, with Lovejoy, and saw him killed. This roll of honor is as follows: Elijah P. Lovejoy, Thaddeus P. Hurlburt, Royal Weller, James Morse Jr., Edward Breath, J. C. Woods, Reuben Gerry, Enoch Lang, Samuel J. Thompson, D. F. Randall, Amos R. Roff, William Harned, John S. Noble, George H. Walworth, George H. Whitney, Winthrop S. Gilman, George S. Brown, H. D. Davis, D. Burt Loomis, Henry Tanner. Of this committee the last one, D. Burt Loomis, passed away at his home in Minneapolis one year ago. About 9 o'clock the mob surrounded the warehouse again. The attack came promptly, accompanied by many shots. Capt. Long ordered one shot fired in response. This killed a man, and the mob dispersed, but returned later to the attack with greater fury. An attempt was made to fire the roof, and during a lull Lovejoy went out to see if the blaze had taken hold. Then five shots rang out from behind a woodpile and Lovejoy fell dead. That ended the trouble. The mob at once retired and no further demonstration was made. Lovejoy was buried two days later, and by coincidence a colored man dug his grave and cared for it for years while others knew not even its location. Later Thomas Dimmock, a St. Louis journalist, procured a lot in the city cemetery, had the remains removed there and placed upon the grave the present stone, a scroll of New England granite, bearing the words: "Here lies Lovejoy. Spare him now that he is buried." In August, 1885, Mr. Dimmock transferred by deed to the colored people of Alton all right, title and interest in the lot and its contents, and they are now its legitimate custodians. Such is the history of the man whom the people of Illinois have thus commemorated in imperishable stone. History has vindicated his work and his principles—the essential point of which, after all, was based not on abolitionism, but upon the maintenance at all hazards of the right of free speech and the liberty of the American press.

ANCIENTS VALUED GOLD.

Antique Mining Implements Discovered Near the Red Sea.

Gold was probably the first metal observed and collected, because of the instinctive understanding of its intrinsic value. About it superstitions grew, religious and ceremonious rites and strange crimes were committed for its possession in the days when it was believed that it was of such stuff that the sun itself was made and the halls of Valhalla paved. Rock paintings and carvings of Egyptian tombs earlier than the days of Joseph indicate the operation of washing auriferous sand, and a subsequent melting in furnaces by the aid of blow pipes. Less than twenty years ago the old mines of Nubia, so graphically described by Diodorous, were rediscovered on the shores of the Red Sea, together with a line of ancient wells across the desert; the underground workings where ore veins had been followed with the pick, the rude cupelling furnaces for assaying, picks, oil lamps, stone mills, mortars and pestles, inclined warming tables of stone, crucibles and retorting furnaces of burned tile, by which the entire process could be traced.

Here slaves and hapless prisoners of war exchanged their life blood for glittering dust to fill the treasuries of their captors. In India and Asia Minor the powdered ore was washed down over smooth, sloping rocks and gold caught in the fleeces of sheepskins sunk in the stream. It was literally a golden fleece that Jason brought back from the Caucasus. Further north and following the eastern foothills of Mount Ararat to the southern slope of the Ural mountains in Russian Siberia, where last year millions were taken out of the old mines, the ancient Scythians broke up rock and gravel with copper implements, scraped out the glittering dust and nuggets with the fangs of wild boars, and carried their gain away in bags of leather. All through this region miners of today know that one of the chief dangers to be avoided are the Scythian pits, sixty feet deep in the gravel, and shaped like a well. The remains of thousands of small furnaces of burned clay testify to the long period over which the workings of the mines extended.—Modern Machinery.

AMAZING ESCAPE FROM DEATH.

Whirled Around a Shaft Nearly Ten Thousand Times.

Nine thousand three hundred and seventy-five times did Engineer James L. Grander, in a mine at Bourne, Ohio, revolve rapidly in a fly wheel. It was a twenty-foot wheel, making 125 revolutions every minute, and the unfortunate man was in its coils for an hour and a quarter. It was while he was at work in the mine that he fell into the wheel, which was going at full speed at the time. It continued to whirl. There was no one at hand who witnessed the accident, and consequently no effort was made to stop the whirling of the wheel. The man mercifully lost consciousness almost immediately. In the course of about an hour some one discovered Grander's plight and the wheel was stopped as soon as possible. He was not seriously hurt.

Victoria's Favorite Pose.

Soon after the birth of the Prince of Wales, Victoria's picture dandling the infant heir to the throne on her knees was displayed in shop windows throughout the land. It was received with enthusiasm. Something of the motherliness of this royal woman touched the hearts of her people and Victoria, quick to see the hold that it gave her upon them, has maintained the practice of presenting them at regular intervals with a photograph of herself dandling something in the shape of a descendant upon her knees. First her own children, then her grandchildren, and later still her great-grandchildren all have served as ties to bind her more closely to her subjects.

A Good Boy.

"Why are yez decorating, Mrs. Murphy?"

"Me b'y Denny is coming home the day."

"I thought he was sent up for foive years."

"Yes, but he got a year off for good behavoare."

"Sure, it must be comfortin' for yez to have a good b'y like that."—Tit-Bits.

"I think some of our ex-policemen must be down there acting as jailers."

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Inheritance.—The difference between men is largely a difference of inheritance.—Rev. R. Harcourt, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Luck.—The greatest men are quickest to acknowledge their debt to that Providence which fools call luck.—Rev. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

Obedience.—Obedience was the secret of Peter's success. Obedience is the success of every human life to-day.—Rev. W. E. Dugan, Presbyterian, San Francisco, Cal.

Jonah.—There is nothing more up to date along the lines of nineteenth century theology than the judgment of Providence recorded in John.—Rev. O. S. Michael, Episcopalian, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Heaven.—Heaven is the largest and grandest work Almighty God ever built, sublimely and transcendently superior to all others and fixed in space.—Dr. F. W. McCloskey, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga.

Synonym of Love.—The turtle dove has time immemorial been a synonym of love. Her song has been caught up by the human heart and rendered into the sweetness of human affections.—Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Independent, Chicago, Ill.

A Life of Fact.—The modern age is marked above everything else by its love of the fact. Art and literature, as well as science, are intent on discussing nature's laws and reproducing life as it is.—Mrs. Celia P. Wooley, Independent, Chicago, Ill.

Pulpit and Pew.—There was never a time when the preacher and the people need more to distinguish the true idea of preaching than at present. The pulpit and the pew need to get closer together.—Rev. R. T. Matthews, Christian, Louisville, Ky.

Parentage.—The important thing to us is to know that the child of a bad parent is not dependent upon the heritage from one or two parents, but has the race backing and encouraging him.—Rev. Caroline Bartlett-Crane, Independent, Kalamazoo, Mich.

A Glorious Future.—There is a future coming—a future with its glory, honor and immortality. Mortgage not that future. Be not like Esau, who for one morsel of meat impoverished all his after years.—Rev. Dr. Webb, Evangelist, New York City.

The Synagogue.—The synagogue, like the heart, is an institution for the moral uplifting of the people, for the dissemination of truth and the cementing of relations of brotherhood between man and man.—Rabbi Jacob Voorsanger, Hebrew, San Francisco, Cal.

Sacrifice.—An anarchist who dies, however mistakenly, for humanity, is a better Christian in my belief than a clergyman, however devout his prayers, who will not sacrifice for the cause of mankind.—Rev. W. D. P. Bliss, Congregationalist, San Francisco, Cal.

Abuse in Charities.—Nowadays men are demanding upright men of character in city government. Hereafter every one of the city's poor and unfortunate should receive that individual care which truth and honesty demand.—Rev. H. A. Stimson, Congregationalist, New York City.

Manhood.—What boy has grown to manhood without feeling the soiling touch of the world? The longer a river flows the darker it becomes. Man left to himself becomes worse the longer he lives.—Rev. Jas. B. Orr, Congregationalist, San Francisco, Cal.

Divine Care.—What a sweet comfort the thought to the soul in trouble that there are no chance events in this world, but that all are the result of a divine, watchful care!—Rev. B. M. Parmer, Presbyterian, New Orleans, La.

Prayer.—Be true to your religion and pray. Pray for yourselves, for one another and that the mission will not be a malediction to any through neglect in corresponding with its institutions, but to all a source of blessing.—Rev. Father Van der Erden, Catholic, San Francisco, Cal.

WONDERFUL LITTLE WEAPON.

The Recoil from Every Shot Fires the Next Shell.

The most wonderful weapon ever seen in this country in the way of a revolver is at present in San Francisco, the property of Theodore Kytka. The weapon comes from Bavaria, and several governments are making bids for it. The pistol wrecked a target in the station house during the test—not only wrecked it, but pierced three inches of chilled steel at the back of it. All this innocent-looking little weapon requires is that the marksman pull the trigger once, whereupon it empties itself of six loads in two seconds.

A Great Disadvantage.

"I suppose," remarked the sarcastic housewife, "that in the course of time ice will be worth as much as diamonds."

"Well," replied the ice man, reflectively, "diamonds are pretty good in their way. But you can't rely on their melting down so as to keep up a steady demand.'—Washington Star.

Swelled Feet.

"How comes it, sir, that when I ask you for a No. 5 shoe you give me a No. 1?"

"Why, my dear sir, you'll be so proud of those shoes that your feet will swell."—Harper's Weekly.

Patience Rewarded.

His first love's age was just twenty-five,
When at twenty in marriage he sought her;
He failed; but again at forty did strive,
And this time he married her daughter

In Sir Walter Scott's Mail Bag.

Some letters from the fair sex caused Sir Walter Scott at least as much amusement as annoyance. In his earlier years "a mad woman from about Alnwick," by dint of letters and plans, first extracted from him a guinea for a charity, then sent him the manuscript of a curious novel, which he was to publish in his own name, and of which he was to take half the profits. Finally, on his declining the partnership, she suggested he should take shares in a medicine for babies, her own invention. Dread of participation in "such a Herodlike affair" drove Scott to decline the honor of future correspondence with the lady.

On a March day in his fatal year, 1826, Sir Walter answered two modest requests from widow ladies. One of these, presuming on a former slight acquaintance with his mother, desired that he should impress on Peel, then home secretary, the merits of her second son, whom he was to represent as "fit for any situation in a public office." The second lady, who had already perused "Marmion" and "The Lady of the Lake," engaged, in return for a suitable provision for her son's education, to read all her benefactor's other works. After dealing with these letters, Scott felt himself constrained to record his conviction that "your destitute widow, especially if she hath a charge of children and one or two fit for patronage, is one of the most impudent animals living."—Temple Bar.

Reward of Literature.

Among the women writers of the capital there is one young matron whose name is very well known. A few months ago she sent a short story to a magazine which presented itself as an untried field. By and by she received notification that the story had been accepted and that in payment thereof her name had been put on the subscription list for one year. The author immediately returned answer that the compensation was not adequate.

"Dear madam," the editor wrote back, "yours of such a date received. We have put your name on the subscription list for two copies each month."

And for fear that further correspondence would burden her with three copies of the magazine she was forced to be content with that.—Washington Post.

Cement Pipes.

Cement pipes are made cheaply by an ingenious process devised by a French inventor. A trench is dug and the bottom filled with cement mortar. On this is placed a rubber tube covered with canvas and inflated. The trench is then filled up with cement. As soon as this is set the air is let out of the rubber tube, which is then removed and used again in another section. By this method 6 inch pipes have been made at a cost of 22 cents a yard.

MISERY BY THE WHOLESALE,

Is what chronic inactivity of the liver gives rise to. Bile gets into the blood and imparts a yellow tint, the tongue fouls, and so does the breath, sick headaches, pain beneath the right ribs and shoulder blade are felt, the bowels become constipated and the stomach disordered. The proven remedy for this catalogue of evils is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine long and professionally recommended, and sovereign also for chills and fever, nervousness and rheumatism.

"How did you first know that there was such a man as your husband, Mrs. Thrifty?" "I happened to see his financial standing in the commercial reports."

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

FREE TRIAL TO ANY HONEST MAN.

The Formost Medical Company in the World in the Cure of Weak Men Makes this Offer.

HAPPY MARRIAGE, HEALTH, ENERGY AND LONG LIFE.

In all the world to-day—in all the history of the world—no doctor nor institution has treated and restored so many men as has the famed ERIE MEDICAL COMPANY, of Buffalo, N. Y.

This is due to the fact that the company controls some inventions and discoveries which have no equal in the whole realm of medical science.

So much deception has been practiced in advertising that this grand old company now makes a startling offer.

They will send their magically effective appliance and a month's course of restorative remedies positively on trial, without expense, to any reliable man.

Not a dollar need be paid until results are known to and acknowledged by the patient.

The Erie Medical Company's Appliance and Remedies have been talked of and written about till every man has heard of them.

The highest medical authorities in the world have lately commended them.

They possess marvelous power to vitalize, develop, restore and sustain.

They create vigor, healthy tissue, new life.

They stop drains that sap the energy.

They cure all effects of evil habits, excesses, overwork.

They give full strength, development and tone to every portion and organ of the body.

Failure impossible, age no barrier.

This "Trial Without Expense" offer is limited to a short time, and application must be made at once.

No C. O. D. scheme, nor deception; no exposure—a clean business proposition by a company of high financial and professional standing.

Write to the ERIE MEDICAL COMPANY, Buffalo, N. Y., and refer to their offer in this paper.

Stop! Women,

And consider that in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience in treating woman's diseases is greater than that of any living physician, male or female.

You can talk freely to a woman when it is revolting to relate your private troubles to a man; besides, a man does not understand, simply because he is a man.

MRS. PINKHAM'S STANDING INVITATION.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read, and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman. Thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Out of the vast volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has relieved thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.

HER EXPLANATION.

So you have wondered at me—guessed in vain
What the real woman is you know so well?
I am a lost illusion. Some strange spell
Once made your friend there, with his fine disdain
Of fact, conceive me perfect. He would fain
(But could not) see me always, as befell
His dream to see me, plucking asphodel,
In saffron robes, on some celestial plain.
All that I was he marred and flung away
In quest of what I was not, could not be—
Lilith, or Helen, or Antigone.
Still he may search; but I have had my day,
And now the Past is all the part for me
That this world's empty stage has left to play.

THE SILENT GUEST.

Past 9 o'clock, and a bitter night.

It was raining as it had rained all day; a gathering wind lashed the hedge-rows and the shrieking boughs of the naked elms, and there was sleet in the wind.

For his own reasons, Mr. George Masters was avoiding the highway, preferring instead to plunge in the darkness across the fields, falling again and again in the ruts of sandy mud ridged with last week's snow, gray and sodden. He cursed through chattering teeth, as he made for the far, twinkling light of the "Hare and Billet."

Pretty luck this for a man—on Christmas eve, too! He had spent the gray, gloomy afternoon lying among the soaked gorse by the road-edge, with the sleet in his ears, and the steady rain winning through the shag-coat and the greasy brown coat beneath it, to the flannel waistcoat that sheltered his pistols.

Chilled to the soul, with no dry thread on him, he had waited faithfully till 'Squire Hales' horse-hoofs splashed the mud over the gorse bushes, and then the numbed finger-tips crept under the flannel waistcoat. He half rose among the furze as the red roquelaure went past him, to the plash of the hoofs and the jangle of the bridle-reins.

But when he saw the two servants turn the corner, with holsters before them, he sank back into his wet nest, a prey to natural annoyance.

The horses went on toward Shooter's Hill, and a dripping figure stood in the way they had come, shaking a helpless fist and cursing all things below the beetling sky. Then George Masters tramped across the strip of furze-clad common and flung himself through a gap in the hedge of the turnip-field. He broke into a heavy run when he saw the light from the kitchen of the "Hare and Billet" blinking before him.

The unfortunate footpad unhasped the gate, and stepped forward to stand with the host of the "Hare and Billet" in one gathering puddle.

"Gone by," said Mr. Masters, bitterly, "gone by—to Greenwich by this time, likely—with his two bloody-minded serving-men behind him—a cowardly, white-livered, gold-laced hound."

"You're wet, George," said the landlord; "come you in under a roof." Reproof of George's bitterness of speech was in the tone—the tone of a man who had his own disapopintments to contend with.

They came up the bricked path to the back door and passed in under the lean-to roof of the shed. It was quite dark, and they moved shuffling among the barrels of beer, the firewood, and farm, tools that covered the earth floor. The landlord raised the heavy wooden latch of the door leading to the house, and they passed up the two steps into the big room—kitchen and tap-room in one—and shut out the night and the cold.

A pleasant kitchen with tiled floor and a comforting mass of red coals glowing in an iron basket sticking out of the wall. A kitchen with blackened settles, long benches, and tables ringed with many ale-cans. A quiet kitchen where only one man was, and he, the hostler, in the big arm-chair asleep.

The landlord roused him with his foot, and he sat up, rubbing a beery eye with a chilblained fist.

"Mr. George is coming in here to sleep to-night, Bill," said the landlord. "I take it his majesty the king won't trouble a poor fellow a Christmas eve. Hot him some ale—a quart of ale—and spread his coat over that chair-back—main wet and main dry, Mr. George be, I take it."

"He'll sleep in his chair, then," returned the hostler. "There's a man above us now, in the bed, a real gentleman he is, with his sword and his rook-lay—come in when you was out, when the heavy rain come on. I showed him up to the bedroom and kindled the fire, and he lies there, burning two of the big wax candles; and if he don't drink the bottle of claret, it's opened, and will have to be paid for, too. Terry don't like him, Terry don't; hear to him howling—he'th whined like that ever sin' the old gentleman come. Hark to 'un again, now the wind's quiet."

The mongrel fastened by the front door was baying howl upon howl. A kick at the panel, and a command to "lie down" from the landlord, appeared to soothe him for the moment, but the long whines son broke out again. The dog wailed to the wind, which answered with fierce gusts of passion, and hurtling of sleet against the lattice panes. When the dog was silent for a while and the wind paused to gather itself for new effort, the rain pattered gently, the clock ticked to the chorus of a choir of crickets—and East Wickham's belfry jangled in the distance.

The men in the kitchen were sitting in the shadow, of an idea.

"He don't seem to be moving," said the hostler, breaking the silence. "He's not awake now, for sure."

The others looked at him with sudden interest, as if the presence upstairs had passed from their thoughts.

"There's a purse above stairs, I make no doubt, and a gold sneezin'-box up there, as'll keep awake, if they've any sense." Bill went on, grinning at the subtlety and success of his conversation, but not looking at his companions.

"There's something I don't like, Willum," Mr. Masters remarked, "about old gentlemen's purses."

"I wouldn't like," put in the landlord, apparently addressing a pewter measure, "an ole gentleman to lose his purse here. Gives the house a bad name—that sort of thing—and a good name," he continued, facing his subordinate—"a good name to a house of entertainment is better than rubies."

Having delivered himself of this sentiment, he spread his hands over the arms of his Windsor chair and leaned forward with an air of awaiting suggestions. But none came.

He coughed, looked at Mr. Masters, and went on. "There was a dear old gentleman come here, let me see, why it was as near as possible a year ago."

"It was a year ago," put in George.

"Well, he come here (I'll have to go out and kick that dog), and 'Is this the Deptford Road,' he says, 'my men?' and you says, 'Matter o' twenty mile, master, and a bad road for a lonely traveler to leave a comfortable public behind on.' And he says, 'My horse is as the gate-post and he'd be better in the stable,' and he walks in and orders candles and supper."

"Did he have them?" asked the hostler, breathlessly.

"He had all he ordered, and more," said the landlord, slowly, "but he went on that night, after all." He looked at his companion; appreciated the reminiscence in the eye of George, the child-like admiration for superior achievement in that of Bill, and pursued: "Yes," he went on, "an' when he went, he left his gold watch and sneezin'-box, and nineteen pu'cas in a red silk bag. He didn't want 'em where he was going."

"Where was that?"

"Don't I tell you? Deptford."

They all laughed gayly, and the landlord took out a stone bottle and thick glass rummers from the corner cupboard.

"His Majesty, King George, wot you're so fond of—here's his health, and our gracious Queen Charlotte, and long to reign over us!" George gave the toast, and they drained their glasses.

"Giniver!" said the hostler, and added tentatively, "a man could do anything wot's drunk, Giniver."

"Anything short of murder, he could," assented George; "but it's nothing short o' murder would do for that dog o' yourn, Tom."

Indeed, the dog's long-drawn howls still disturbed their Christmas festivities. Moved by this incongruity, the landlord went out and kicked it.

A gust of wind and rain found way into the room, and Mr. Masters coughed again violently, and shivered and swore.

"Can't you shut the door?" he asked; "this ain't no weather for a poor man with his living to get, and his pockets as empty as the day he was born."

"Well," said the landlord, "our pockets was empty enough last Christmas here, afore that ole gentleman called."

And still no sound from the room upstairs.

"There's another purse up there this night," remarked the footpad, "waiting for them as is sportsmen enough to take it, as two bold lads did last Christmas eve."

The chill wind must have made its entry still felt in the room, for the landlord shivered again, and the footpad wiped the palms of his hands upon his knees.

"And another old man," he said. "I was the man that did it, and I suppose it'll be my job again. That dog howls fit to wake the dead. I don't like this indoors work, with doors and curtains, and stairs a-creaking, and having to wash your hands this weather. I'm a man that earns his living in the open air, I am, where things is straightforward, and nothing can't come creeping up behind you without your seeing it."

The landlord suddenly lifted the wooden latch of the inner door, held his candle above his head, and peered into the darkness.

"No one there," he said; "and I could have sworn that minute I heard a breath. I don't like your talk to-night, George. Wake the dead, and washing of your hands indeed; aint' it enough to——"

He stopped abruptly to pour out more spirit.

"Oh, let him talk, master," cried the hostler, "it puts heart into a man, it do—talking over old times."

George chuckled grimly, and when he had drained his glass, he said cheerfully:

"Ay, that does it. It all comes back to me. It was him as held the light by the door, when I run in; and it was me as—— He bled very free, he did, very free."

"Yes, I held the light, though much against my wish, mind you—thank Them as be," said the landlord, regarding his grimy fingers with satisfaction; "thank Them as be, my hands is clean."

"They won't be clean long, then. It's me what holds the light to-night," said George, firmly, and he took the candle and walked to the foot of the stair.

"Not a sound," he said.

The landlord had risen—the shock-headed man shifted his big shoulder on the bench where he lay, and the expression rose in his face of a terrier awaiting with eager nose the rush from cover of his first rat.

"If," said he, hesitatingly—"if it comes to that, you can both hold the light—sooner than see them guineas should get up and ride off in the morning. I know a young man what would as lief hold a bill-hook as a candle any day of the week."

And he looked so savage that the landlord was unaffectedly shocked. But George came back to the table for another dram, and after it had been tendered him, remarked that that young man would not want for a backer. Then he knocked the damp priming out of his pistol on the table-edge and filled the pan.

"I'll just listen once again, if so be he's soundly off," and he disappeared cautiously up the winding stairs, turning back to add: "and don't any of you come creeping up behind me, for I don't like it."

The other two looked anywhere but at each other, without speaking. There was no sound from above after the stairs had ceased to creak under the footpad's weight. Outside the dog howled, a long, low baying that never ceased.

The hostler fetched a bill-hook from the lean-to shed and employed the time in taking off his boots. After a glance at the other, he sat down with the bill-hook hidden by his coat-flap.

Both men started at the first creak of the stair.

George stood at the stair-foot, blinking in the sudden light.

"He's a-sleeping like the dead," he whispered. "Can't even hear him breathe. His candles is burning yet; I see them through the key-hole. Come on!"

All three stood together for a moment at the bottom of the stairway. There was a moment's hesitation, while the landlord and Mr. Masters adjusted the procession behind Bill, who had planted his foot on the bottom stair. At this inopportune instant, the tall clock in the corner struck 1, with a shrill metallic stroke, and Bill withdrew his foot suddenly, dropping the bill-hook. It fell to the red tiles of the floor, which gave back clang on clang.

Aghast at this mishap, the host pushed his clumsy-fingered servant back into his place in the corner; Mr. Masters and himself reseating themselves with a hastily assumed appearance of genial domesticity.

But no startled guest appearing on the stairs after ten minutes of complete silence, the procession re-formed in its old order, and went up.

Outside the bedroom door they held their breath and listened—not a sound but the ticking of the clock below, the rushing of the wind without, and the moaning plaint of the dog.

A stealthier man than the hostler, the landlord thrust a sleek hand forward to grasp the latch of the door. It was unsecured, and opened a little way under his gentle pressure. Through the foot of opening they could see the two waxen candles flame in the sockets as they burned by the sleeping man. By their light his legs modeled themselves under the white counterpane. His face and shoulders were in the deep shadows of the faded green curtains of the half-tester.

At the sight of the bed the heart of the hostler became suddenly sick within him. With white lips and shaking knees he vacated his place in the procession, and pushing past the landlord, who was still poising himself at the stairhead, he made his way to the room below. At that moment, could their limbs have borne them, his companions would have followed him. They huddled together in the corner of the landing, holding their breath and listening until the taproom door opened and shut; and they knew themselves alone with the sleeper.

For the terror of those strained minutes, it might have been the old man behind the curtains who was the ambushed watcher.

The wind had lulled, and the rain, falling ceaselessly and silently, made no sound on the thatched roof. For awhile the dog was silent in the yard.

This was an old man, scant of breath, or surely his breathing could have been heard in the dreadful calmness of the night.

The landlord, with his shoulders raised, had stolen on tip-toe into the room. One of the candles was now guttering and flaring preparatory to going out; the fragment of the other burned on with a long, red, smoking wick, lighting up the bright point of the rusty case-knife clenched in his fingers.

He glanced upward at the brutal features of the footpad. Their eyes met with the same thought in each. It was the recollection of that other night, when they had stolen into that room to rob another helpless, sleeping old man of sleep and life.

The great silence was not to be borne. The footpad put out his hand and thrust the landlord forward by the shoulder. He drew back, stumbling heavily. As he recovered himself, they both sprang forward toward the bed and tore back the old green curtains.

Behind these, his poor white face thrown back over the pillows, lay the old man, his thin hands rigidly grasping the edges of the sheet drawn up close under his chin. They leaned over the bed and half drew back.

"By God! 'tis very like him," said the landlord in a whisper.

George had his hands on the sheet and pulled it back roughly.

"It is him, by God!" he cried. For, as he pulled back the sheet, the last candle flared up and died down and went out. Its last light shone on the sleeper's throat, gashed across—horribly gaping—red and wet. This was no stranger, but the man they had murdered a year ago; they had left him just so last Christmas morning.

There was a heavy fall on the floor in the dark, and some one rushed to the stair, screaming loudly.

The dog in the yard whined with pleasure to hear a human voice, and then once more there was the silence of death in the "Hare and Billet."

* * * * * * *

In the red haze of early Christmas morning, the hostler came up the sodden lane, and with him, plashing in the white water of the cart-ruts, walked the village constable and the bell-ringers, who had adjourned from East Wickham belfry to drink in Christmas at the "Old Fox." Marching with them were the unsteady white gaiters of two Grenadiers furloughing in the village.

A wet and miserable dog, who dragged a broken chain, leaped forward in delight at their coming, and through the unlatched door the party poured into the house. A Grenadier drew his bayonet, and tramped upstairs like a bold man, and the crowd hustled one another to follow him.

In the best bedroom the landlord lay dead on the floor—dead beside the white counterpane and unpressed pillows of an empty bed. Something wrong with his heart, folk said.

By the gate of the straw-yard the constable picked up a brass-barreled pistol; and wandering about on the wet straw they found a man with cropped black hair and a heavy jowl, who gibbered and said he was his Sacred Majesty, King George, and God bless him.—San Francisco Argonaut.

COALING A BIG STEAMER.

Very Crude Methods Yet Prevail—Cost of the Work.

All the ships of the transatlantic lines are coaled by practically the same crude method. Barges of about 350 tons capacity are brought alongside of the ship, booms are rigged, and by tackle controlled by a donkey engine steel buckets are lowered to the barge, filled by four men with shovels, and hoisted to a projecting platform, where two men dump the bucket and shovel the coal into the porthole. It is then taken by other men and stowed away in the ship's bunkers. Five and a half of these buckets is equal to a ton, and tally by count of the buckets is the only record to show how much coal the steamer has taken aboard.

In coaling the steamship St. Paul of the American Line forty-eight men are employed inside the ship. The average amount of coal bunkered is 3,000 tons, the time required to unload and stow is about forty hours, and the total average cost of the work is $1,000. These figures, varying only with the coal consumption of the ship, will apply to the vessels of other transatlantic lines.

Efforts to reduce this expense have been productive of many ingenious mechanical devices, and the inquiry is often raised why none of these is in general use. The answer is given in the statement by a representative of one of the transatlantic lines: "We have had many offers to deliver coal to our steamers at the rate of anywhere from 50 to 500 tons per hour, but what is the use when we cannot take care of it inside any faster than we do now?" In a modern ship fuel must be stored wherever room can be found that is not required or available for other purposes. Coal cannot be received on board faster than it can be stored away in bunkers, which, in the case of a modern liner, is at the rate of about one and one-half tons per man per hour.

More primitive methods prevail in ports of less importance than those at either end of the Atlantic lines. In the West Indies coaling is almost exclusively done by negro women, who pour in a ceaseless stream over the gang planks, each carrying about 100 pounds of coal in a basket poised on her head.

In Mediterranean ports the work is done by men instead of women, but for the most part with the same primitive instruments—shovel and basket.

Protected by Their Color.

For years naturalists have been studying the part which color plays in protecting animals from their enemies. Protective coloration is the technical term which is given to such cases of protection. Last November Abbott Thayer, the artist, gave an open-air talk, demonstrating his theory of protective color, to naturalists gathered from all over the country. He placed three objects of about the size and shape of sweet potatoes, horizontally on wires a few inches above the ground. They were covered with a sticky material, and then dry earth from the road where they stood was sprinkled over them to give them the same color as their background. The two end ones were then painted white on the under sides, and the white color was shaded up and gradually mixed with the brown of the sides. When viewed from a little distance, these two end ones, which were white below, disappeared from sight, while the middle one stood out in strong relief, and appeared much darker than it really was. Mr. Thayer explained that terrestrial birds and mammals, which are protectively colored, have the under parts white, or very light in color, and that the color of the under parts usually shades gradually into that of the upper parts. This is essential in order to counteract the effect of the shadow side, which otherwise, as shown by the middle potato, makes the object abnormally conspicuous, and causes it to appear much darker than it really it. This device of nature is operative throughout the animal kingdom, the marine world offering scarcely any exception to its universality.

Makes One Exception.

A California temperance association limits the beverages of its members to wine, beer and cider, "except when laboring under a sense of discouragement, and then whisky shall be allowed." They are said to be the most discouraged temperance people in the State.

CAPITAL CITY BLACKS

FORM ONE-THIRD OF WASHINGTON'S POPULATION.

In No Other City in the Union Have the Colored People So Much Wealth and Intelligence—Pay One-Tenth of the Taxes.

Some Are Shiftless.

Washington correspondence:

With so large a colored population as there is in Washington—a population which, were it by itself, would make a city twice the size of either Elmira, Yonkers or Auburn—there is, as there would be in any so large a community, a class of the idle and shiftless who eke out a hand-to-mouth existence.

Washington was thoroughly Southern in its beginning. Its resident citizens are still largely Southern. In consequence of this many of their homes were originally built in the old slavery style with the negro quarters in the rear, and while in some cases the family servants still live in this manner, they are now the exceptions. But in many cases there are handsome houses facing on aristocratic streets, while the alleys in their rear are filled in solidly with dilapidated two and three-story frame houses which are packed with negro families, an astonishing number of them living within the inclosure. However, it is down in the old canal districts of the city and in such places as "Hammersleys," "Louse" and "Goat" alleys that the lowest type of the negro element of the capital is to be found. Here they fairly swarm, living as compactly as bees in a hive, and idleness, filth and poverty hold full sway. That there is suffering in these quarters in the winter time there can be no doubt, but the weather is seldom intensely cold in Washington, and while it is warm and the pangs of hunger are not too poignant the average darky of this section seems oblivious to his discomforts. The women lean from their windows and chat the hours away in idle gossip, which often becomes so animated that a nearby policeman has to bring it to a summary close; the men seek sunny corners out of the sight of these same police (who seldom consider it necessary to see them) and all day long, and often all night long, indulge in that form of gambling which seems to fascinate the colored contingent all through the South, the game of "craps."

But there are not the representative colored people of Washington, for it is an incontrovertible fact that in no other city in the Union is there so much wealth and intelligence as among them here. While the population is one-third colored, one-tenth of the taxes of the city are paid by them, and they are represented in almost every branch of business and the professions of the city. There are over thirty colored physicians in Washington, many of them well educated, and with large practice. There are also quite as many lawyers and numerous real estate agents, while there are hundreds of ministers of the various evangelical churches, and 297 professors and teachers in the public schools. There are between 3,000 and 4,000 people employed in the Government service with salaries ranging from $5,000 per year, which is the salary of the recorder of deeds, who is a colored man, to $40 a month, which is paid the charwomen. There are also several colored men who are employed in the Congressional library.

Two excellent papers are published and owned by colored publishing companies—the Colored American, a national negro newspaper, and the Bee, a paper more local in its scope. They are published weekly and have large circulations. The American is an exceedingly creditable sheet; it is an eight-page paper and it gives a comprehensive sweep of the questions of the day as they relate to the colored man.

WOMEN LEAN FROM WINDOWS AND CHAT.

Its editor and manager, Edward E. Cooper, is one of the brightest and brainiest young men of his race.

One of the interesting places about Washington is the old Fred Douglass home, The Cedars, on the Anacostia Heights overlooking the city. It is one of the most beautiful for situation of all the residences of the Capital City. It is on the summit of a high hill and is surrounded by magnificent cedars and oaks and the views from the windows are of unsurpassed loveliness.

UNCLE SAM'S NEWEST BATTLESHIP.

The Alabama, the new warship for the American navy, is rapidly approaching completion, and it is one of the finest, if not the finest, that have risen from the ways in the big shipyards of the Cramps. This engine of destruction is one of four sister ships. The three others are the Kearsarge, Kentucky and Illinois, which are now well under way at the yards in Newport News. The Alabama is a battleship of the first class. She is 372 feet long by 79 feet in the beam and draws 23 feet of water. She has 11,500 tons displacement, or just 100 tons more than the Iowa. The Alabama will have only two turrets and will be much less heavily armored in every way than the Iowa and the Massachusetts class of ships. The Alabama will be the most powerful fighter in all the navy. The engines of the new ship are of the triple expansion type, working in separate water-tight compartments. These engines will develop a combined horse power of 10,000, which will drive the ship at a speed of sixteen knots an hour. Seven decks will rise one on the other. There are water bottom, platform deck, berth deck, protective deck, main deck, upper deck and bridge deck. There will be living quarters for 500 men with their officers.

Mr. Douglass bought this place a few years previous to his death and it is here that he brought his white bride and lived with her during the remainder of his life, excepting when they were abroad traveling. Mr. Douglass left a very large estate and with some other property willed this place to Mrs. Douglass. There was, however, a flaw in the will and she was only allowed an interest in it, but has since been buying it from the other heirs. She lives alone now and has made almost a Douglass memorial of The Cedars. Mr. Douglass' library is kept intact as he left it. Several large life-size pictures of him adorn the walls. A life-size bust is in one corner and many souvenirs presented to him during his lifetime are to be seen on the mantels and tables.

Mrs. Douglass looks rather frail and a little as though life's wind had blown in her face, but if she has ever regretted the step she took in marrying the man with the black skin not by a word has she ever betrayed it. "He was the greatest man of his age," she says proudly, "and the pioneer of his race. I knew no color line when I married him. I know none now. I only wish to be one of the grand army who are trying to help uplift the downtrodden everywhere of both races."

Still a Strong Prejudice.

That there is a strong colored prejudice in the District cannot be denied, and a cultured, scholarly man in whose blood there is but a taint of black extraction said to the writer the other day with intense bitterness in his voice, "Where is the spirit of the Christ who said, 'Do unto others as ye would have them do unto you' among the Christians of Washington? I am a colored man and I went down to Baltimore yesterday in one of the river steamers, and because of my color I could not buy a mouthful to eat nor a drop to drink all day, and when I reached the city there was not a respectable hotel nor restaurant owned by white men where I could go to satisfy my hunger. I cannot take a lady and go out to Cabin John, Glen Echo or Chevy Chase (three prominent pleasure resorts) and be admitted, nor am I allowed in the white churches. Not in one single store in this capital of the nation is there one of my race employed in any position higher than a porter or elevator boy, and although I am a graduate of Princeton and try to conduct myself as a gentleman, I am not permitted to occupy the desirable seats in the theaters or other places of amusement. Do you wonder that I feel that there is no ultimate hope for my race in Washington?"

Ex-Senator Bruce, a leading colored man, takes a much more hopeful view of the case. "No," he said in answer to my query, "I do not expect to live to see social equality, but I do not despair for my race. Time will ameliorate the difficulty. When the colored people raise themselves to the level of the white man intellectually and financially the difficult problem will be solved, for when I have what the white man wants my color will not keep him from coming to me for it. And my people have made wondrous progress; no other people under God's heaven have made such advancement despite such adversities as they. Think of it! Every other class of people have had those of their number who inherited their wealth, but scarcely a dollar of our wealth came to us through inheritance. Thirty-five years ago we were a penniless, ignorant and utterly inexperienced people. No one owned any property and no one had any experience in acquiring it, yet look all over the land to-day and there is scarcely a hamlet where colored people may not be found sitting between their own vine and fig-tree."

"Compare the Russian serf with the negro.

"Thirty years ago four and a half millions of black people were set free and scarcely one of them owned the price of a breakfast. At about the same time these Russian serfs were freed also, but to each family a certain number of acres were given them and a pittance on which to start life. Compare them now. The serf is the down-trodden serf still; the Russian Jews have swindled him out of almost all his property and he has become the menace of civilization, the nihilist. Did you ever hear of a negro who was an anarchist or nihilist? No, you never did; nor did

A GAME OF "CRAPS."

I, and I believe that in his heart the average colored man was loyal to his country, and when he learns to make the man of himself that he is capable of, then I will have no fear for him."

Watertight Compartments.

There is nothing new brought into the field of invention, but what some musty old antiquarian sooner or later announces that the Chinese were familiar with the trick long years ago. Cassier's Magazine instances the following confirmation of this generally:

The division of a hull of a vessel into compartments is of a more distant period than is generally supposed.

As early as the beginning of the nineteenth century the Chinese divided the holds of their trading vessels, intended for distant waters, into a number of smaller holds or spaces. These compartments were separated by partitions made of 3-inch plank, and caulked with gum that was mixed with lime and threads of bamboo—a composition that readily hardened when brought into contact with water. The number of compartments depended upon the number of owners in the vessel.

At just what time this division of the hull was first adopted does not appear to have been recorded. It may have been very old at the period named. The compartments were made for commercial economy, rather than for the safety of the vessel.

Use of bulkheads for safety purposes was probably first made in the Western rivers of the United States.

As early as 1820, not ten years after the introduction of steam vessels on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers by Robert Fulton, the hull of the steamboat Columbus, running between New Orleans and Shippingport, Ky., was torn open by a snag, but the vessel was "saved from sinking by having a snag room, which apartment alone was filled with water."

The Caledonia, running on the Mississippi River in 1824, also had a snag room.

Prior to the year 1849, of 736 vessels lost from all causes on the Western American rivers, 419 were lost from snags and other obstructions in the rivers. No doubt the danger in navigating these rivers is what brought the snag room or chamber into use.

Artificial Teeth.

The use of artificial teeth is of ancient origin. Two curious specimens of artificial teeth from the Etruscan tombs, dating from four or five centuries before the Christian era, may be seen in the museum of Corneto, on the coast of Italy, in the mouths of two young girls. On the jaw of one may still be seen two incisors fixed to their neighbors by small gold rings, while in the other, the rings remain, but the artificial teeth have fallen out. The teeth, carefully cut, had evidently been taken from the mouth of some large animal.

MILLIONS IN BUTTONS

CATCHES MADE OF COSTLY DIAMONDS IN THE DAYS OF LOUIS XIV.

An Inventory That Reads Like a Fairy Tale—The Ridiculous Mania For Gigantic Buttons In the Eighteenth Century. Collectors Pay High Prices.

Recently at the Hotel Drouot there was a sale of a curious and interesting collection of ancient buttons, the property of Baron Perignan of Paris. This collection, which was exhibited in 1889 at the exposition of decorative arts, might rival any one of those belonging to the most enthusiastic buttonists in the world. Clapisson, the musician, collected 7,750 different specimens. In 1849 a collector in Ghent exhibited more than 30,000, and M. Maignien, the librarian of the Grenoble library, gained a certain reputation in this branch of curiosities through his collection of buttons of liveries and of uniforms.

The buttons of the eighteenth century bring high prices in the market at the present time. There are some of them that Fragonard, we are told, decorated with his marvelous pencil. In his time it was fashionable to make presents of buttons as big as a crown piece, on which allegories and various subjects were carved.

Bachaumont writes in his "Secret Memoirs," Nov. 18, 1786: "The mania for buttons is today extremely ridiculous. They are not only of enormous size, some of them as big as six pound crowns, but miniatures and pictures are made upon them, and this ornamentation is extremely costly. Some of them represent the medals of the 12 Cæsars, others antique statues and still others the Metamorphoses of Ovid."

Isabey, in his biographical notes, says that when he came to Paris he worked for a living by making copies of Vanloos and Bouchers on the lids of snuffboxes, and that for these medallions he was paid from 6 to 8 francs each. "As it was still the fashion," he said, "to wear buttons as big as a 5 franc piece, upon which Cupids, flowers and landscapes were cut in cameo, I went into that business. I got 12 sous for each."

Two years after this period in the life of Bachaumont buttons abandoned erudition to take up oldskip. All the fine monuments of Paris were carved on them. Then came the patriotic buttons, representing the taking of the Bastille, the emblem of the three orders, the Phrygian cap, the portraits of Louis XVI, of Mirabeau.

Shortly afterward these ornaments were laid aside. The reign of the artistic button was over, and the mother of pearl button became general.

The oldest buttons at present in the museums and among the collections are the gold buttons discovered at Mycenæ, at the time of the excavations undertaken by Dr. Schliemann, and also those found in the tomb of Childeric I. The latter were exhibited at the Louvre in the Musee des Souverains. They are made of gold and of colored glass, imitating garnet. Buttons detached from copes and religious garments of the middle ages and of the renaissance have also been discovered.

But the richest things of the kind, beyond a doubt, are those that were worn by Louis XIV. M. Maze-Sencier, in the "Register of Diamonds and Presents to the King," at present preserved in the ministry of foreign affairs, gives an official account of the buttons of that pompous sovereign. It is as follows:

"Feb. 3, 1685.—Montarcy presented to the king 80 diamond buttons, valued at 180,030 livres.

"May 7, 1685.—Made and delivered by Sieur Eose, 6 diamond buttons, 80,000 livres.

"July 26, 1685.—Handed over by Montarcy to the Marquis de Seignelay for the king 75 diamond buttons, 586,703 livres.

"Aug. 1, 1685.—Two diamond buttons, 67,866 livres.

"Aug. 16, 1685.—Three diamond buttons, 69,660 livres.

"Dec. 20, 1685.—Four diamond buttons, 83,775 livres."

Another item in the same year:

"July 26, 1685.—Furnished by Montarcy for the king's vest: Forty-eight gold buttons, each set with a diamond, and 96 clasps, 48 of which were composed of five diamonds each and 48 of one diamond each, 185,123 livres.

"Also 384 clasps for the doublet of the king, 192 of which were formed of five diamonds each and 192 of one diamond each, 1,006,345 livres.

"In addition there were seven ornamental clasps of three diamonds each, 201,270 livres.

"Sundry presents, 33 ornamented clasps, 574,366 livres."

That foots up a total of about 3,000,000 livres for the buttons of the "Great King" for the single year of 1685. The preceding year Louis XIV received a lot of buttons that were valued at 1,071,000 livres. In these enumerations there is no mention of the diamonds for the shoes, the garters, the cuffs and the hats of the monarch.

We are obliged to admit, with our coats and overcoats garnished with miserable little cloth and bone affairs, we cut a poor figure in the fancy button business compared to the dudes of the days of Louis XIV.—Paris Figaro.

Time to Change.

It was at a table d'hote dinner at a hill station in India that a very young officer just up from the plains found himself seated next to a lady whom he took for one of the grass widows common in those parts. He made himself agreeable, but his neighbor seemed a good deal out of spirits, so he said sympathetically:

"I suppose you can't help thinking of your poor husband grilling down below?"

But the lady was a real widow, and when he learned that he changed his seat.—London Vanity Fair.

President Dole of Hawaii is in San Francisco. He is on his way to Washington, where he will work for annexation.

Ever since the publication of Professor Schenck's alleged "sex" discovery the neighbors of Mary Ellen Lease, in Kansas, report that she has suddenly evinced a marked affection for that good old Methodist hymn, "We Must Be Born Again."

Church Notice.

The order of religious services will be as follows until further notice:

Independence—Preaching service every Sunday evening commencing 7 o'clock.

Lone Pine—Every Sunday morning (excepting the last Sunday of each month) commencing at 11 o'clock.

George's Creek's—The first and third Sunday of each month to commence at 2:30 o'clock.

Liberty—The last Sunday of each month to commence at 2 o'clock.

All are cordially invited to be present at these services.

ORDINANCE NO. 62.

THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF THE COUNTY OF INYO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA, DO ORDAIN AS FOLLOWS:—

SECTION 1. The regular meetings of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, shall be held at the Court House in the Town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California, on the First Monday of April the First Monday of July, the First Monday of October and the First Monday of January of each year and must continue from time to time until all the business before said Board shall be disposed of. Such other meetings of said Board must be held as are otherwise provided by law, and such special meetings as may be ordered by lawful authority.

SECTION 2. This Ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after fifteen days from its passage, and Ordinance No. 57 of said Board of Supervisors, together with all ordinances and parts of ordinances of said Board in conflict herewith, are each and all hereby repealed.

SECTION 3. This Ordinance shall be published with the names of the members of said Board of Supervisors voting for and against the same in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper published in the said County of Inyo at least one week; said publication to be made for said time, and before the expiration of said fifteen days.

A. C. FREEMAN,
(SEAL) Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California.

Attest: D. J. HESSION,
Clerk of said Board of Supervisors.

The above and foregoing Ordinance No. 62, was duly passed, enacted and ordained by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, at a regular meeting of said Board, on the 10th day of January, 1898, by the following vote:

Ayes:—A. C. Freeman, J. J. Stewart, J. R. Eldred, Frank Shaw, Frank Fitzgerald.

To Thomas McDonnough.

You are hereby notified that I have expended $500.00 in labor and improvements upon the following mines or mining claims situated in Beveridge Mining District, Inyo County, California, commonly known as called the Bronco mine, Porter mine and the Brittian mine, as will appear by certificates filed in the office of the County Recorder of said Inyo county, in order to hold said premises for the years 1896 and 1897, under the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States being the amount required to hold the same for the two years ending December 31, 1897. And if within 90 days after the publication of this notice you fail or refuse to contribute your proportion of such expenditure as co-owner, to wit: $100.00, your interest in said claim will become the property of the subscriber, under said Section 2324, and under Section 1 of an Act entitled "An Act relating to the working, rights of way, easements and drainage of mines in the State of California," Approved March 31st, 1891.

Chinese New Year was ushered in with a blaze of glory and fire-crackers last night. Today the pagans are busy remembering their friends.

E. Newman came down from Mazourka yesterday. He is having a boarding house built, and as soon as this is completed will commence mining operations

Last night Inyo Lodge No. 301, I. O. O. F., installed the following officers: M. C. Mulloon, N. G., P. H. Mack, V. G., J. D. Blair, Secy.; E. Robinson, Treas., P. W. Forbes, R. S. V. G., Wells Barnes, Warden; John Alexander, I. G.

On Monday afternoon Marshall Naylor was arrested for robbing Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express near Independence on November 24th last. He was placed under $5,000 bail, which was given. He was given a preliminary examination before Judge Lamar this morning, and held for trial in the Superior Court. O. C. Harper, the stage driver, was the only witness examined.

The Lone Pine Trouble.

The preliminary examination of Stokes and the Johnson boys, accused of assaulting Charles M. Green with a deadly weapon, was called up at Lone Pine last Tuesday. The attorney for the defendants moved to dismiss the case on the complaint did not state a public offense; that no depositions were taken by the Magistrate previous to issuing the warrant of arrest, and that the examination hae been postponed for more than two days without the consent of the defendants, which was in violation of Section 861 of the Penal Code. The first two grounds were considered by the Court an insufficient reason for dismisial, but it appearing that the provisions of Section 861 of the Penal Code had been violated, he dismissed the case and ordered a new complaint to be filed, which the District attorney proceeded to do, but on consultation with the complaining witness, Charles M. Green, being the party injured, he, Mr. Green, being unwilling to prosecute and from information received by the District Attorney, and his observation, he concluded that the examination of this case might and probably would, in Lone Pine, last for a week, and being required to attend before Judge Lamar, acting as a magistrate, upon another examination, he stated in Court that there would not be sufficient time to examine this case before he would be required to attend before Judge Lamar in another examination. The District Attorney also stated that any proceedings that would be taken in the matter would be had or not, might in a great measure depend upon the future conduct of the defendants.

As the case now stands the defendants are liable to prosecution before any magistrate within the County of Inyo, at any time.

All Broke Up.

A miner named George Edmunds was badly hurt in a mine at Alabama last Monday. He was working in the bottom of a twenty-foot shaft when a slip came down and buried him. He was working with a man named Benson, who got assistance and dug him out and hoisted him to the top. The injured man was brought to the County Hospital at once, and Dr. Doyle was engaged to assist Dr. Blair in caring for him. His right shoulder blade was broken and both bones in the left leg below the knee, a compound fracture, and the wound bled profusely. He also sustained severe cuts and bruises about his head and body. He is a man of Herculean strength and iron constitution, and Dr. Doyle states that with proper care he will recover.

Randsburg Notes

Special correspondence Los Angeles Express:

With the advent of the new year this camp is now furnishing employment to at least 600 miners who are engaged in mining in Rand District. Considering that two years ago scarcely a dozen miners and not a single habitation was to be found in the entire district this statement will be indicative of the great progress made in the mining development of Randsburg. Eighteen months ago only a few sample lots of ore were extracted. Now there is an output of over 350 tons of ore per day. Much of this ore is high grade and mills away up in the hundreds, but estimated at an average of only $25 per ton, it will be seen that the Randsburg mines are producing nearly $9000 per day. Figured on the basis that the products of other mining camps are, it will be observed that Southern California has in Randsburg a small Klondike of its own, whose production of gold for 1898 will be over $3,285,000.

A number of good copper mines have been discovered in the neighborhood of Colorado Springs on the eastern slope of Black Mountain. These properties have been experted, and being only 12 miles from Randsburg are interesting many of its citizens.

A recent milling of ore taken from the Blackhawk mine netted $30 per ton.

The Pinmore and King Solomon mines are producing thirty-eight tons of $40 ore per day.

Over one hundred miners are now employed on the fa ous Yellow Aster group. Under the new management of this valuable property work is progressing rapidly. A new road has been graded to the top of the mountain along its eastern slope from the Stringer section, and the old road on the Randsburg slope has had a spur graded to the immense ore bins so that the large mule teams can swing around on the mountain side.

The Republic mine is now among the ore producers of Randsburg, and this week shipped to mill about twenty tons of valuable rock.

The new railroad from Kramer to Randsburg is now in operation, and trains leave for Los Angeles, San Francisco and the East every morning at 7 o'clock, returning in the afternoon. It is stated that this service will shortly be increased, and there will be two trains daily in and out of Randsburg.

One of the greatest copper discoveries in the west has been found near Granite Wells, about twenty-six miles east from Randsburg. The property is owned and worked by "Toppy" Johnson, an old-time mining expert, well-known in Western mining circles. The percentage of copper in this mine is so strong that old horeshoes, wagon tires or iron hoopbands when cast into the water or sump of the shaft are virtually transformed into copper. This is caused by precipitation which takes place whenever iron comes in contact with liquid solutions of copper. An ordinary brass pin suspended half way into the water of the mine is exhibited, showing a perfect transformation, being half copper and half brass, the copper portion being that part which was immersed in the water. A syndicate of capitalists are now negotiating for the purchase of the property, which is considered very valuable.

Dry washing continues brisk with the present favorable weather, and when the snow and rains come this method of placer mining will be succeeded by rockers and sluice boxes—provided there is water enough. There are many valuable placer mines along the route of the new railroad, and a project is said to be under way to haul water in tank cars from available points near Barstow, which will be used in sluicing and wet washing processes over in the Stringer country and near St. Elmo Station. Once inaugurated, this new enterprise will open up a profitable industry.

J. B. Reinstein, J. H. Budd and W. C. Jones, the trustees appointed by Mrs. Phoebe Hearst for the obtainment of an architectural plan of the buildings and grounds for the University of California, have completed their programme for an international competition, open to the architects of the world. Copies of the program for distribution will be forwarded to the capitals of all foreign countries and to the principal cities of the United States. The competition will close on July 1, '98, when all plans must be deposited with the United States Consul at Antwerp, Belgium. A total sum of at least $20,000 will be devoted to premiums for the best plans. The sum of $50,000 has been deposited in a San Francisco bank as a guarantee that the trustees will keep all their promised agreements. The programm gives full details of the competition, places of deposit, of plans, etc. The competition is open to the world and closes July 1st, '98. The regents have been enabled, through the munificence of recent gifts, to enter upon the work of erecting several groups of buildings, that in construction, extent and appearance shall be commensurate with the fine site of the University.

When Mark Hanna's supporters heard the ballot announced they gathered about the corpulent boss and sang "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow." The Ohio Republican conception of God must be something unique. We profess no acquaintance with the ways of Divine Providence. But we are quite sure that Divine Providence has not been engaged in the work of getting votes for Mr. Hanna. We are inclined to think that the supporters of the good Mr. Hanna have mistaken Colonel Mazuma for God.—Stockton Mail.

Another Dunham suspect has been discovered, this time in Boston. The Deputy Sheriff's of Santa Clara county who have an inclination to travel are evidently determined to touch the bottom of the county's exchequer.

Traveling Libraries.

A series of papers recently published in the Call directed attention to the need of a greater diffusion of standard books among the people of California, and pointed out as one of the best means o supplying the need the establishment of traveling libraries upon a plan similar to that adopted in other states of the Union.

The proposal is not new to those who have interested themselves in the promotion of public libraries and augmenting the opportunities for intellectual culture. Some time ago the Library Association of Central California adopted resolutions declaring that traveling libraries are essential to the diffusion of knowledge throughout the State and pledging support to the establishment of such a system.

The proposal, therefore, has good indorsement as well as good reasons to support it. It is one that well deserves consideration in all parts of the State. It should not be permitted to pass unnoticed in the rush of general affairs. The establishment of such a system will require legislative action, and in order that such action may be assured at the next meeting a campaign of popular education on the subject should begin at once.

The smaller towns and more sparsely settled counties where library facilities are scant or altogether lacking have a special interest in the movement to establish the proposed traveling library system. To them it would lead to the formation of permanent libraries in many communities where under existing circumstances the creation of such institutions is regarded as among the things remote and improbable.

The plan of the proposed system is simple. The State is to provide a number of "traveling libraries" containing from fifty to one hundred volumes each These are to be carefully boxed and made ready for shipment to any part of the state, where a library association is prepared to receive them, pay the freight, circulate them, and guarantee their safe return to the State authorities.

The system has been adopted and operated with conspicuous success in several of the more progressive states in the East. In New York upward of one hundred of these libraries, carefully selected and under the control of the University of New York, are now traveling from one locality to another In Wisconsin the success achieved has been so great that men of wealth have become interested in the movement and have made rich donation to promote it.

California possesses one of the finest State libraries in the Union. It is, however, of comparatively little use to the people, because the books are kept at Sacramento and are not to be read except by residents or visitors to that city. The traveling system would enable the people in all sections of the State to enjoy the benefits of the library they are taxed to maintain. It would place at the disposal of even the smallest community a large number of standard books at no greater cost than that of paying the freight, and as the libraries would circulate from community to community that would be small.

The advantages to be gained are certainly great. The movement now begun should be supported with such force in every county as to assure the establishment of the system when the Legislature meets.

Honor to Whom Honor is Due

The Sacramento Bee of December 29 pays the following tribute to Hon. P. Reddy:

"The Bee feels that it is no more than right and proper, just at this time, after it has gained a great victory for the freedom of speech and of the press to accord to Hon. P. Reddy the credit that is his due. He fought the good fight for the Bee loggedly, pertinaciously, unflinchingly. Instructed only that the paper desired the case contested to the bitter end; that there was nothing to retract, nothing to apologize for, nothing to explain; but that the Bee was in the right and proposed to stand by its colors, regardless of the consequence—he entered upon a battle royal to the liberty of the press and the rights of the citizen which should entitle him to the thanks of all liberty-loving citizens. His plan from the first was to stoutly maintain the truth and not to flinch or compromise; and one of the opening shots in the contest was the submission to Judge A. P. Catlin of an answer, sworn to by the editor of this paper, which the Judge declared from the bench to be "more contemptuous than the original contempt."

It is not to be considered from this that Senator Reddy is only a burly gladiator in the Court-room. He can be the very apotheosis of Chesterfield himself, as suave, and polite, and smiling as a May morning, and yet at the same time there is the heart of a warrior beneath his genial exterior.

Even in the contempt case where a bold and determined stand was the only position which self-respect and a knowledge of being right would permit, Senator Reddy was not merely the dogged and bull-headed fighter. He was as well the able, keen, and searching Constitutional lawyer, who had gone down into the very soul of the Constitution and the laws on the freedom of press and citizens and had held it up so that all might see His argument before Judge Catlin and his brief before the Supreme Court were marvels of clear and lucid presentation of the very heart and genius of our Constitution and our laws, so far as they relate to the points at issue in the contempt case.

We do not know what Senator Reddy thinks of his client, but the Bee certainly has great respect for its lawyer."

Circumstantial Evidence.

There is a considerable number of persons who hold that capital punishment should never be imposed on circumstantial evidence alone. This belief apparently gave Theodore Durrant a very large proportion of those who have declared their faith in his innocence.

This contention is based upon weak, illogical ideas as to the punishment of crime. What is circumstantial evidence in law? "It is distinguished from positive evidence," says Wharton, "in that the latter is the testimony of eye-witnesses to a fact or the admission of a party, but the prevalent opinion now is that all such testimony is dependent on circumstances for its support. All testimony is more or less circumstantial."

Note the last sentence of the quotation. "All testimony is more or less circumstantial." Let a fight or an accident occur on the street, or anywhere in the presence of a number of witnesses. The accounts given by no two witnesses will agree exactly. They will differ upon very important points. The human eyesight is very fallible. The same thing seen by different persons of varying minds and temperaments is received and construed differently, so that they may honestly differ in their statements.

In the majority of murder trials the evidence presented is mainly circumstantial even where there are eye-witnesses When there are no witnesses it is essential that the chain of evidence presented shall be complete. When this condition obtains it may easily be the case that circumstantial evidence is more convincing than positive evidence.

The most remarkable murder trial in criminal history of the United States, the Parkman trial, was based entirely upon circumstantial evidence. The chain of evidence was complete, and its soundness was ultimately proved by the confession of the convicted murderer.

There is one feature connected with the Durrant trial that is of great importance in all murder cases based on circumstantial evidence. The testimony not only showed positively that Durrant murdered Blanche Lamoni, but it also demonstrated that no one else could have committed the crime. That fact being established, the chain of circumstantial evidence proved to the satisfaction of jury and of the great majority of the public that Durrant did murder the girl. So it would be a great mistake to make positive evidence essential to the conviction and execution of the person who deliberately takes another's life. It would be almost equivalent to the abolition of the death penalty for murder.

KNOCKED OUT.

It knocks out all calculations of attending to business in the right way for a day when we wake up in the morning sore and stiff. The disappointment lies in going to bed all right and waking up all wrong. There is a short and sure way out of it. Go to bed after a good rub with St. Jacobs Oil and you wake up all right; soreness and stiffness all gone. So sure is this that men much exposed in changeful weather keep a bottle of it on the mantel for use at night to make sure of going to work in good fix.

Particularly Patient.

"Patience, my dear, patience," said Harkins blandly to his wife one morning at the breakfast table when she spoke a trifle sharply to one of the children for dropping his bread, buttered side down, on the cloth. "You know that accidents will happen, and we were children ourselves once. I'm sure that Bertie didn't mean to—great Jupiter! There goes Harold's glass of milk all over my new trousers. If I don't—oh, you'd better skedaddle from the table, young man. It beats everything. Get a cloth, somebody, and clean up this mess. It beats thunder that a man can't sit at his own table without being tormented and bespattered as I am every time I try to eat a meal under my roof. Look at these trousers—absolutely and utterly ruined. Just wait till I get hold of that boy. Just wait till I lay hands on him, and I'll teach him how to deliberately throw a glass of milk over a guinea pair of trousers. Don't tell me that he didn't mean to do it. He came to the table with the intention of doing it, and I—I—well, you'll see what I'll do when I get hold of him."—Strand Magazine.

REPUTATIONS MADE IN A DAY

Are precious scarce. Time tries the worth of a man or medicine. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a forty-five years' growth, and like those hardy lichens that garnish the crevices of Alaska's rocks, it flourishes perennially, and its reputation has as firm a base as the rocks themselves. No medicine is more highly regarded as a remedy for fever and ague, bilious remittant, constipation, liver and kidney disorders, nervousness and rheumatism.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

FREE MEDICAL BOOK FOR MEN

How to Restore Lost Manhood and Perfect Development.

This great work, plainly written by a high medical authority, shows how manly vigor can be regained and obstacles to marriage removed. It is a modern work for men who suffer from nervous debility caused by overwork, youthful indulgences or later excesses. It points out how to be cured of nervousness, despondency, impotency, at home, without interfering with business.

IT IS ABSOLUTELY FREE.

This great book, entitled "COMPLETE MANHOOD AND HOW TO ATTAIN IT," will be mailed free, in plain, sealed wrapper, to the address of any sincere inquirer by the Erie Medical Company, 65 Niagara Street, Buffalo, N.Y. No C.O.D. scheme; no deception.

"He wouldn't know the truth if he saw it." "Oh, yes, he would. Otherwise he could not evade it so easily."

Rather Personal.

"Ladies," said the chairman of the meeting of the Woman's Advanced Thought and Practical Experience club, "this meeting, I believe, was announced to be a symposium on the subject of 'Apartment House Nuisances.'"

There was a murmur of assent and approval, and from the way every woman in the hall straightened up it was evident that there wasn't one of them who didn't feel that she had something of importance to say on the subject.

"I hope," continued the chairman, "that we will be able to get through this afternoon, but it is unquestionably a most comprehensive subject, and, with your permission, I will undertake to divide it so that we can take up one feature at a time."

"So lovely!" "Just the thing!" and "How nice!" came from various parts of the hall.

"I would suggest that we first take up the landlord, as he"—

Cries of "Mean thing!" "Promised us a porcelain bathtub a year ago!" "Won't paper the hall!" etc.

—"is one of the greatest of flat building evils. After disposing of him, I think perhaps the janitor"—

Cries of "Disobliging creature!" "Freezes us to death!" "Absolutely insulting!" etc.

—"should claim our attention. We all can speak with deep feeling on this branch of the subject, and possibly we may find it necessary to limit discussion of it. Then I would suggest that we group children and dogs"—

Cries of "The pets!" "Darlings!" "Dirty creatures!" "Noisy youngsters!" etc.

—"and close with a discussion of flat building gossips, the most troublesome and notorious of their kind."

There was a dead silence as she ceased speaking. The women looked at each other in a bewildered sort of way, and then almost as one person they got up and moved toward the door.

"Personalities should be barred," said one as she angrily marched out.

"I never was so insulted in all my life," said another.

Sending Bedclothes by Mail.

An old negro bearing a huge bundle of bedclothes which were somewhat the worse for wear and none too immaculate in character rapped at one of the little windows up at the postoffice. The clerk who appeared in answer to the summons was thus greeted by the aforesaid darky:

"Boss, I'ze got tu send dis here bundle o' bedclo'es to my old 'oman down in Mis'sippi. Is dis here de place whah I'ze got ter start it off?"

"Oh, you want to send the package by mail, do you?" asked the clerk, without cracking a smile.

"Sartain, fer sho', boss. How much is I got ter pay?" inquired the darky.

The clerk could not resist the temptation to play a joke upon a fellow clerk, so he said:

"Well, uncle, this isn't the place for you to leave your bundle, but if you will just take it down to that window below here"—indicating the general delivery department—"and hand it in to the clerk down there, he will put the right number of stamps on it and send it off for you."

"Thank'ee, boss; thank'ee. I sho' is obleeged ter you," said the unsuspecting Senegambian.

He at once made his way to the department indicated. Arriving there, he thrust his huge bundle into the window, into which it fitted closely, at the same time telling the astonished presiding genius of that department please to put stamps on it and sent it to "my old 'oman, Sallie Sanders, down in Water Valley."

It is said that a coolness now exists between these erstwhile friendly clerks in the Memphis postoffice.—Memphis Scimitar.

"PYRITES SAM"

We all thought Pyrites Sam was a fool the very day he struck the camp, but were not absolutely certain until the night he came in with his pockets full of pyrites of iron, and taking each man aside privately informed him, with many injunctions as to secrecy, that he had discovered and located a brass mine. As a rule we had grown very tired of initiating every tenderfoot that came along into the mysteries of quartz mining; showing them the difference between gold-bearing quartz and country rock; between a true fissure and contact vein; between granite, porphyry, schist, spar, serpentine, quartzite, etc.; of trends, dips, spurs, angles, etc.; of shafts, tunnels, stopes, winzes, and drifts; of the manipulation of the horn spoon or gold pan; how to distinguish the resultant sediment, if gold, from mica, pyrites or sulphurets; in a word, teaching them in an hour or two all we had learned after years of toil and privation. We had reached this stage of the "tired feeling" when Sam brought in his "brass" specimens, and not a man of us would tell him what it was. "Uh-huh," we said, as he carefully exhibited his deceptive-looking find. What did we think of it? Why, it was a great find and very high-grade ore—if it was brass. "If"—why, of course it was brass; look at it; anybody could see what it was. We admitted that they could; yes, anybody that knew anything at all. So we permitted Sam to work away in ignorance on his claim for two weeks—until he received returns from the sample sent to Los Angeles for assay. Then the "Brass Monkey," as Sam called it, shut down, and he went to prospecting again. We never asked him any questions, but he volunteered the information that it was of good ore, but at that distance from a railroad it could not be handled at a profit. One day one of the boys found his certificate blowing about the camp. It contained no figures, only a statement of what his find consisted, and that hereafter to insure an answer he had better inclose a stamp, as the office could not afford to lose the postage in replying to the queries of alfalfa miners. The finder tacked this on to the postoffice door, but Sam only grinned, and said "we all got to learn."

He was so persistent and industrious in his determination to "strike it rich" that we finally began to have a fellow-feeling for him and to appreciate his pluck; sympathy he did not need. He was jolly and good-natured, did not drink to excess and was never known to turn a card for money. In a friendly game in his tent the suggestion of "draw" at only a dollar limit was always met by his quiet statement that he never played for money, that he was raised different, and, besides, his money "came so hard" that he knew he would be a bad loser. He was always ready with his sympathy when another's ledge "pinched," "petered" or "broke off," and encouraged him all he could; always had a song or a story for a bad night; and in the event of sickness or injury had some simple remedy in the way of poultices that his mother "used to use." In fact, he was one of those happy-go-lucky, light-hearted fellows, handy about camp and a friend to everybody, but one could not get rid of the impression that he "didn't have any more sense than the law allowed." Therefore, it was accepted as a matter of course, when a tenderfoot struck camp one day in the first stages of desert fever, that Sam should take entire charge of him and dose him with wild sage and "squaw" tea and concoct appetizing dishes from bacon, beans, rice and flour. Some of us dropped in occasionally on our way to or from work to learn the patient's condition and to offer suggestions, but Sam was considered head nurse.

As a "stayer," malarial or Chagres fever is not to be compared to desert fever. The latter drags along and hangs on day after day, week after week, and although the patient may be able to crawl about he is weak, debilitated and nerveless and "don't care a rattle out of the box" whether he lives or dies. This was the condition of that tenderfoot. During the middle of the day he dragged himself about the camp in the sun, but the remainder of the time he spent in his bunk in his tent. One night, when most of the boys were assembled in the "Bedrock," Sam came in, and, going up to the bar, drank alone, contrary to his usual custom, then turned his back on the crowd, leaned his elbow on the bar and gazed out into the darkness, at the same time twisting his mustache fiercely, as if worried over something.

"What's wrong, Sam? Patient dead?" some one asked.

"No," said Sam, "but he's a-layin' up there wishin' he was. I tell you, pardners," he continued, turning to the crowd, "I've been in hard luck myself—so've all of us, I guess—an' seen others in hard luck, but that poor cuss up there's in the hardest streak of luck I ever see. He's plum down to bedrock an' nary color."

"That's nothin,' Sam; we've all been there many a time. What's the matter—out of grub?"

"Naw, he ain't out o' grub, an' won't be as long's Sam's got any; but it's somebody else. I got a letter for him to-day on the stage an' took it down to him. After he read it he jest turned over with his back to me an' laid quiet, but purty soon I shifted to where I could see his face, an' I'll be derned if he wasn't cryin'—yes, sir, cryin' like a baby, he's that weak, you know. I says to him easy like, 'What's the matter, pard?'

"'Nothin',' he says, 'only more hard luck.'

"'Girl gone back on you? I said, thinkin' to be cheerful an' makin' up my mind to josh him.

"'No,' he says; 'it 'ud a-been better for her if she had long 'go. Read that,' he says, an' handed me this," concluded Sam, as he drew a letter from his pocket. It was dated from an Ohio village and read as follows:

"My Own Dear Husband—Your loving letter received yesterday, but it found us, oh, so down-hearted and wishing for papa. Dear husband, it seems that our troubles will never end. Mr. Rhoades has changed his mind and will foreclose the mortgage. You know he said before you went away that if we paid the interest up he would let it stand a while longer. Well, when the mortgage was due I sold the cow and took some of the money you left me to live on and paid the six months' back interest. Now he says, as the mortgage is due, he must have his money and will foreclose. I tried all the companies and banks to borrow the money to pay him, but they all say that $2,000 is too big a loan on the place; they won't loan over $1,500, and he won't take a second mortgage to secure the other $500. Yet it does seem hard, when the place ought to be worth three times $1,500. I've tried every way to sell it, but I can't get no one to give anything above the mortgage. Everybody knows it is mortgaged and are waiting to buy it at Sheriff's sale. Rhoades knows this, too, and now he says it will save us lots of trouble and costs if we will give him a quitclaim deed and surrender peaceable possession. I begged him to wait a while, but after he had learned you had gone out to the mines he said he would not wait a day; that you were on a wild-goose chase, and, dear husband, he even intimated that he believed you were never coming back to us. That made me angry, and I may have said things to him that I should not, but I could not help it. Now, dear husband, I can not stay here after having sold the cow; there is nothing to do here, you know, except washing and ironing and house-cleaning, and I am not strong enough for that. Mrs. Simmons will take Bessie and let her help with the housework and go to school, and I will sell the chickens, pigs and furniture and take little Charlie and go to Cleveland to try to get sewing or something. It will be, oh, so hard, but it can not be helped. Now, dear husband, do not worry; we will get along some way. Remember the words of the prophet: 'Once I was young, but now I am old, but never have I seen the righteous forsaken or their seed begging bread.' Now, dear husband, take care of your health, and if you do not find anything out there soon, come back to us, we miss you, oh, so much. Every night Bessie prays for her papa, 'way out in the mines,' and that he may find something rich. You may be sure that I echo her prayers. Write as soon as you get this, dear husband, for I can not stay here long. Your loving wife,

"MAGGIE."

This letter was passed around; two or three started to read it aloud, but they broke down, and it was silently passed from one to another. It was well for Mr. Rhoades that he was not in camp.

"He told me all about it," said Sam. "They was five acres in the home place that he got from his father's estate close to town, an' he bought five more joinin', mortgagin' the ten to make up the balance of the money. He'd a-made it all right, but times got hard, an' first one, then another of them got sick an' he had to keep on a-mortgagin'. He see he could never pay out, so he come out here to see if he couldn't strike it, leavin' nearly all the money they had with his wife, an' this cuss Rhoades sayin 'that he'd let the mortgage stan' anuther year, now—dern him. See that stain there? That's from a bunch of apple blossoms that was in the letter; he 'lowed they must a-been from the yellow harvest tree back of the garden, poor cuss. 'Take keer of yehr health, dead husban',' an 'him a-layin' flat of his back up there in his tent, without money enough for a month's grub. 'Come back soon to us'—hum-m. Look here, pardners, let's answer Bessie's prayer, an' show this feller Rhoades whether minin' is chasin' wild geese ur not. Mebbe Sam's a dern fool, an' I know he ain't got much money, but he can rustle. I'll go purty nigh my pile on it—there's fifty; who's all in on it?" and he slammed two twenties and a ten on the bar. It was just like Sam, and whoever heard an appeal like go unanswered in a mining camp? There were fifty men in the room, and every man saw Sam's ante, and those that did not have that amount borrowed it from their friends. In a few moments $2,550 in gold lay piled on the bar. Sam's eyes glistened as he counted the money. "Everybody's in on the game," he said; "won't one of you come down and see what he has to say?"

"No nonsense, Sam; you take it down, an' tell us what he says to-morrow."

"No, I'll be derned if I do. Some of you fellers got to come along. I ain't a-goin' to play this hand alone any longer." So three or four of us went with him. Well, there is no use going into details. What would you or any other man say under the circumstances? Finally he wanted to give us a note or send a mortgage back as security, but we laughed at him, and all of us crawled into our blankets that night conscious of having done something that might balance something else on the debit side of the recording angel's ledger. He was too ill to travel alone, and at last, after repeated urgings, Sam was induced to accompany him.

"LOOK HERE, PARTNERS; LET'S ANSWER BESSIE'S PRAYER."

"You can bet your life," said Sam "that I'll give Mr. Rhoades the camp's respec's."

Not long after that my partner and I left the gulch and drifted into Cripple Creek. One day when court was in session we dropped in to see how a court organized under the code operated.

"Well, I'll be d—," muttered my partner as he pointed to the prisoner's dock. There were two men in it, Pyrites Sam and the tenderfoot. The air seemed to grow suddenly close in the court room, and we went out.

"Them fellers?" said an officer in answer to our inquiry; "why, they're two of the slickest all-round con men in the West. They're on trial now for saltin' a mine an' doin' a tenderfoot up for about ten thousan'. Miners? Why, man, they're experts; raised in the mines; show 'em a piece of ore from anywhere between British Columbia and Mexico, an' they'll tell you what district it's from. The officers been a-lookin' for 'em for months, but they've been hidin' out some place down in Southern Californy. I guess they thought their last trick had been forgot, so they come out."

At noon we went down to the jail, and were allowed to see the prisoners.

"Hello, Sam; how's Rhoades?"

"Hello, hello; how's the boys down at Tough Nut?" and Sam and his partner grinned.

"Look here, Sam, you done the camp up in good shape, and you know we won't squeal, but tell us about it."

"Sure; but then they ain't nothin' to tell; this is my pardner, an' there was no fever, no Rhoades, no Maggie, no Bessie, no Charlie, no mortgage, no form, no cow, no—no apple blossoms, no nothin', but jest me an' him."

"An' fifty d—n fools," said my partner as we went out. He made a brief mental calculation, then said: "Sam was there three months an' his pardner one, an' they cleaned up twelve hundred an' fifty each; not bad, 'specially when they was hidin' out from another trick they'd turned." Across the street I saw a building with swinging doors and red windows. I pointed to it and asked, "What'll you take, Jack?"

"I low it'll take about four fingers of hot Scotch to settle my stummick"—and he took it.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Too Many to Count.

Lord Kelvin calculates that the number of molecules in a cubic inch of any gas is 100,000,000,000,000,000,000,000, and in each of these molcules there are several atoms moving among themselves at the rate of seventy miles a minute.

The farther a man can look into the future the fewer creditors he sees.

The German Tribes.

We know nothing of the German tribes until about 100 B. C. Suddenly they loom up in the north, aggressive foes of the Romans. For some time they were held in check by the stubborn resistance of the legions, until finally, when the restraining hand of Rome was withdrawn, they spread all over western Europe in the fourth and fifth centuries of our era. Such are the well known historic facts. Let us see what archæology may add to them. The first investigators of ancient burial grounds in southern Germany unearthed two distinct types of skulls.

The round headed variety was quite like that of the modern peasantry round-about. The other dolichocephalic type was less frequent, but strongly marked in places. An additional feature of these latter was noted at once. They were generally found in burial places of a peculiar kind. An easterly sloping hill was especially preferred, on which the skeletons lay feet toward the rising sun—probably a matter of religious importance. The bodies were also regularly disposed in long rows, side by side, a circumstance which led Ecker to term them Reihengraber, or row graves. Other archæologists, by a study of the personal effects in the graves, succeeded in identifying these people with the tall, blond Teutonic invaders from the north. Such graves are found all through Germany as far north as Thuringia. They bear witness that Teutonic blood infiltrated through the whole population.—Professor W. Z. Ripley in Popular Science Monthly.

YOUNG WOMANHOOD.

Sweet young girls! How often they develop into worn, listless, and hopeless women because mother has not impressed upon them the importance of attending to physical development.

No woman is exempt from physical weakness and periodical pain, and young girls just budding into womanhood should be guided physically as well as morally. If you know of any young lady who is sick and needs motherly advice, ask her to address Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and tell every detail of her symptoms, surroundings and occupation.

She will get advice from a source that has no rival in experience of women's ills. Tell her to keep nothing back. Her story will be told to a woman, not to a man. She need not hesitate in stating details that she may not wish to mention, but which are essential to a full understanding of her case, and if she is frank, help is certain to come!

SUCCESS.

I built a palace by a troubled sea,
Broad walls of spotless white and turrets tall,
Great colonnades, the towers of mine own strength,
I did not dream my palace fair could fall.
But, at the open gate, an angel knelt,
And, sorrow that I knew not of, bewailed.
"Come, friend," I cried, "rejoice in my success."
"I weep," was the reply, "that thou hast failed."

When months had come and gone, I saw the walls
Of my poor palace blackened by the flame,
Its mighty towers in ruins at my feet.
My head was bowed in sorrow and in shame,
And at its shattered gate I knelt and wept.
My angel friend now stooped a palm to press
Upon my brow. She bade me look above.
"Rejoice," she cried, "in this thy first success."

THE WAIF O' FOLEY'S HEART.

THROUGH the sighing boughs of cypress forest there came drifting the hum as of a million bees set in rhythmic tone and tune. It was the great saw at Foley's mill flashing its merciless disc of steel through the green, sweet heart of the cypress logs. Foley himself sat on a low bench, his swart throat bare, his head leaned against a tree, watching through a narrow rift in his lids the swift, mechanical movements of the men at the saw and the shingle pile. The girl who came up noiselessly behind him thrust her small fingers over his forehead and opened the lids of his eyes.

"Wake up, Dave, and take me out in the boat for a ride in the shade. The house is hotter than a furnace."

"How did you get here?" said Foley, indolently.

"I walked across the logs."

"I wish you wouldn't do that, Lize," said Foley, with a frown. "Some day you'll get on a loose one and go under and the logs will hold you fast."

"I'm sure-footed as a kildie," laughed Lize, thrusting out a coquettish, slipped foot. "Come on, Dave."

"Oh, it's too warm for such exercise. Ask Langham to go with you. Yonder he comes." Foley looked up in time to see the curious sidewise glance from the girl's eye.

"What did you look at me like that for, Lize?" he said, suddenly.

"Like what?' she said. Without waiting for an answer she tripped to meet Langham.

"Dave is lazy and contrary," she said, pouting her pretty lips. "He says won't you take me down the river for a boat ride?"

Langham lifted his hat to her. His dark eyes glanced from Foley to the girl with a cynical light that melted into something tender as it rested upon Lize's primrose face.

"With pleasure, Mrs. Foley. Good afternoon to you both. Foley, did you ever feel such a heat in the forest?"

"Not often," said Foley, shifting his straw hat over his eyes to shut out the glare. "There'll be a storm, a regular scorcher in a day or two."

"No sign of it now," said Lize glancing at the yellow sky. Her eyes, in shadow, were a golden brown. When the light flashed into them they were like pools of deep-sea water.

"Where is the boat?" queried Langham.

Foley nodded sleepily toward the landing—a platform of cypress logs.

"Down there," he said. "Lize will show you." Through motionless lids he watched them as they rowed away. His wife blew him a kiss from the tips of her dainty fingers. Far down the blue lake her white dress gleamed like a darting heron under the arched and weeping boughs.

The sun had dropped behind the bluffs of the Mississippi ere the mill shut down for the night, and the men crossed the floating bridge to the other side, where the frail "box" houses constituted the "camp." Two "hands," lingering to light their pipes, were gossiping noisily.

"Foley's gone, I guess. Didn't wait for Lize."

"Foley's a fool. Ketch me sendin' my wife out for boat rides with a fellow like that Langham. City folks don't often hunt out solitary places like this less there's a hotter climate behind 'em. Did you see him, how he looked at her?"

"Soft on her, hey?"

"No softer'n she is on him," said the other, shrugging his shoulders. They passed on, oblivious of Foley's white face staring at them from the engine-room.

Had Lize been wise or observant she would have caught the ominous calm in Foley's voice as he laid his hand on her shoulder that night.

"See here, Lize, I've been thinking it don't look exactly right, your going so often with that fellow."

"Indeed!" said Lize, her lips curling. "Gentleman is a better word than fellow, Mr. Foley."

"I don't know," said Foley slowly. "Gentlemen don't fall in love with other men's wives."

"Who said he was in love with me?" Her face grew suddenly white. Foley's hand tightened its grasp.

"You'd better be careful, Lize. I'll have my way in this. I forbid you to go on the lake with Langham again."

"You were the one who sent me! Take your hand off—it hurts! I don't know whether I'll obey such a tyrant or not!"

She fled into the little parlor and Foley heard the bolt slip in the door.

* * * Two days of sultry weather burnt the ground in wide, deep cracks along the hickory ridge. Lize pouted and avoided Dave, who watched her with eyes grown sullen and suspicious. But the boat remained tied to its tree, the rope swaying in the water undisturbed. Langham, whose vagrant fancy had led him to fit up a rude hut on the south end of the lake, did not come down to the camp. Foley hoped he would stay away. There was a feeling in the tips of Foley's fingers that could have found rest upon Langham's white throat.

The heavens had grown coppery with clouds that Saturday eve. The billows rolled in thunderous mutterings, and through the cypress trees and cane there came the sonorous breath of the storm. The men had left the mill, and Foley, standing midway the unsteady bridge, swept the heavens with his huntsman's glass. He lowered it to watch a snipe in combat with a fellow fowl. A cry broke from his lips; he looked through the glass with an eye keen with fury. It was there that Langham, far down the lake, drew Lize's head upon his breast and their lips met in one passionate caress.

Foley went leaping to the shore like a madman. On, on, up to his house and into the tiny sitting-room. A pearl-handled bit of steel lay upon the mantel; he snatched it up and thrust it into his pocket; the cold steel chilled his blood, and the face of Lize looked at him from its celluloid frame. Foley fell upon his knees and threw the weapon from him.

"Oh, my God! my God!" he cried

* * * The storm that had been brewing all the day at twilight fell with fury. Langham in his cozy cabin heard the outside tempest as in a dream. There was a tempest in his heart—his brain, and the touch of her lips lingering in all its delicious thrill within his veins. He knew it was a guilty love, but in his soul he could not think of her but as a fair, little April's lady—never as Foley's wife. He was a man of the world, and knew what the world would say of him, the dilettante student of men and letters. But the waif tossed to Foley's door by the flood of the great yellow river was the waif who had crept into Langham's heart.

And when the door flew open in a burst of rain and he saw a drenched figure coming swiftly to him he only smiled and held out his arms. She sank into them, sobbing and shivering upon his breast.

"Oh, Geoffrey, take me, take me away from here! Dave struck me—he called me a fearful name! He saw you kiss me and he will not forgive me any more." Loo Langham's face blanched, but he stroked her wet hair tenderly.

"You are safe with me now, Lize, and my own!" he said. His own—but how! She was yet Foley's wife.

"I wish I had not gone with you," she sobbed, still clinging to him. "I am so cold, Geoffrey!" Langham placed her in a chair and found a great shawl to wrap around her; he knelt before her and began to chafe her hands. The September rain was chill and her blue little face was quivering like a child's.

Not until he heard her cry did Langham look up to see Foley standing in the room, his great arms folded upon his breast. Langham sprang to the shelf where his pistol lay, but Foley had a powerful hand upon his arm.

"Not that. If I had wanted to shoot you I would not have given you a chance for life. I've come to talk with you about Lize. What are you going to do with her? I gave her choice of you and me and she chose you."

Langham's face burned dull scarlet, but Foley's eyes were like steady steel.

"She's been an honorable woman—my wife. I don't know how far your love-making his gone, but I want no woman that don't want me. But I can't see her go to the devil. I'll kill her first. She was a baby in a basket cradle when the river floated her to my cabin door. She's been all the world to me ever since. I haven't been so soft-spoken or so loving, but I gave her my name, my love, my respect. Can you do that for her? Or do you want her at all?"

It was a curious, pathetic scene. The girl in the chair stared at Foley, but Langham's face was troubled.

"I love her," he said slowly. "I am willing to make her my wife if it is possible. She is innocent now of all but folly. I swear to you, Foley (with a sudden passion), there is no sin between us."

"So much the better if you love each other. Now, listen. I am going away this night—no matter where. She can get her freedom in a little while and be your lawful wife. I won't bother you—unless you cast her off or break her heart! Then, by God, I'll follow you and kill you inch by inch!"

For one moment Foley's eyes blazed their threat into Langham's heart. Then he was gone into the night without one word for Lize.

Foley's wife looked at Langham dully.

"He is gone," she said.

Langham bent and kissed her face, an agony of thoughts in his brain. But Lize pushed him back from her.

"I shall never be his wife. I shall never see him any more!" she said.

"No, no. You are all mine now. You shall be my wife and we shall forget how love began."

Lize sprang to her feet; her eyes flashed a strange, amber light upon him.

"Oh, I don't love you. I hate you! I know how I love Dave. I want Dave; I am his wife, not yours! I am sorry I kissed you and came to you. Oh, forgive me! I must go to Dave——"

* * * Langham picked up a bit of ribbon that had fallen from her hair. He kissed it with a bitter smile and put it next his heart. * * *

Foley, working like a madman at his trunk, heard a light step upon the little porch. His heart leaped in a sickening throb as Lize crept into the room and stood trembling by the hearth.

"Well?" he said, sternly, through his teeth, "has Langham driven you from him?"

"Dave, Dave! Oh, will you please to let me stay with you? I will not ask to be your wife; only let me say how I did not know I loved you till to-night. You were not like a lover, Dave. You treated me like a child, and I was a woman, who wanted love and sweet words. I hate him! I told him so, and he tried to keep me back, but I had to come to you. I have been wicked—I let him kiss me!"

Her voice died in her throat. Foley caught her by the arms. "I struck you!" he said, hoarsely. "Can you forget that?"

"Oh, yes!" she sobbed, her lips touching his rough hand. Foley caught her in his arms and turned her face toward the lamp. In her eyes he saw the "light that never was on sea or land." In his long, silent kiss the past was buried, and a lovely future dawned for the Waif o' Foley's Heart.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

HYMN OF THE REPUBLIC.

Opinion Formed by a Passenger on Potomac River Boat.

"Do you know what the national hymn of this country should be?" inquired a visitor to the capital of a reporter.

The gentleman propounding the question had traveled extensively in foreign lands and has been in all parts of his own country, from Florida to Alaska and between Maine and California.

The reporter studied a little and then answered, "I suppose you mean 'Down Upon the Suwannee River?'"

The visitor rubbed his hands delightedly. "You have struck it exactly," he declared, "and I'll tell you why I am more convinced of it than ever. I went down the Potomac, the other night, on one of the excursion steamers. There was a large crowd aboard, all good-natured and happy at the idea of having an outing. I sized the crowd up going down, and I made up my mind that it was pretty cosmopolitan—containing people from all sections of the country.

"On the return trip I sat with a friend, a native of New Hampshire, and a Northerner throughout. We were on the deck just below the pilot house. After we had ridden a little time some young people began singing. They rang in the old-time favorites, 'Old Black Joe,' 'Dixie,' 'Maryland, My Maryland,' which, by the way, caused some emotion, and other songs, including 'My Bonnie,' 'How Con I Bear to Leave Thee,' and others. Each one caused a few to chime in, but there was no special enthusiasm.

"At last the singers struck up 'Down Upon the Suwannee River.' The effect was magical. In an instant it seemed to me that everybody on the boat, including my reserved companion, had joined in. The plaintive air floated over the water to the Maryland and Virginia shores, and was wafted upward in the starlight. When it was finished there was complete silence for a little time. I am not an emotional man, but I felt my breath catch and the tears came into my eyes.

"My friend put his hand on my knee. 'I always feel a truer patriot when I hear that song,' was all he said."—New York Telegram.

The Greek National Dress.

The Greek national dress, which is not really Greek at all, but Albanian, is going out of use except among the shepherds and the people of the mountains. But though it is discarded for everyday use, the Greeks are fond of their old picturesque costumes, and nearly every man and woman who can afford to do so keeps a suit of the former type to wear upon family fete days, half au serieux, half as a fancy costume. Greek children ordinarily wear much the same clothes as do American boys and girls at school and about the streets of the larger towns, but are put into the Albanian kilts now and then—perhaps just as much against their wills as it is against the grain of little tots at home to submit to Lord Fauntleroy "fixings."

The Albanian dress is very pretty upon a boy of from 4 to 10 years. The dark rosy face of the Greek child looks out winningly from under the drooping red fez, with its long blue or gold tassel. The little blue or yellow jacket, sleeveless and shaped like a zouave, is covered with embroidery, and is worn open in front to show the white shirt with full flaring sleeves. About the waist comes a leather girdle, heavily embroidered, and with a great pouch called a "banderole," into which men stick pistols and knives, but which does just as well for the small boys' marbles. Below the waist falls a short white cotton kilt, known as a "fustanella." There are also short white breeches, high red gaiters and red shoes which turn up at the points and have tassels on the toes. A little boy in this sort of rig looks like a cherubic bandit out of a comic opera—an effect which is of course quite fascinating.—Philadelphia Press.

The "Earthquake" Coat.

The "earthquake" coat is the latest thing invented. Once enveloped in this extraordinary garment a man may laugh at earthquakes. It really consists of two coats, one over the other, the space between them being thickly padded. On each side are ten pockets for the carrying of provisions. The idea of the coat is to prevent the wearer being injured by any falling object

THE PADRONE SYSTEM

FLOURISHES IN CHICAGO'S ITALIAN SECTION.

Miserable Children Held in Bitter Bondage and Mutilated So as to Create the Sympathy of the Public—Fiendish Cruelty and Greed.

White Slaves!

The horrible padrone spstem flourishes in the Italian section of Chicago and innocent childhood is held in a thralldom far worse than the slavery that existed in the South before the war. Recently a newspaper man, with several police officers, made a tour of the

"AFRAID TO GO HOME."

Italian quarters and the result is a story of bitter bondage, of fiendish cruelty and of most rapacious greed.

The first stop, says the reporter, was made at a tumble-down two-story house on Ewing street, near Desplaines. No lights could be seen from the outside, but the noisy gabble of voices told of a lively commotion among the inmates. Here, on the upper floor, in one squalid room, lives a man with fifteen children ranging in age from 5 to 16 years. None of these belong to him by parental ties; they have been bought or leased from inhuman mothers and fathers, or stolen outright. As the party groped its way up the dark stairs there was the sound of a hard slap, and a man's voice uttered some harsh reproof in Italian. A faint gleam of light came from under the door of the room, but the door itself was barred—they always are in that part of the town, where unexpected visits by the police are not welcome. Officer Birmingham laid his hand on the knob lightly and the lamp was at once extinguished. It took long rappings and repeated assurances in mongrel Italian to convince the man that no harm was intended, or, in other words, that he was not to be arrested, and finally he consented to open the door part way while inquiry was made after a supposititious neighbor. The timely striking of a match revealed a room bare of furniture with the exception of a rickety cook stove, a rough pine table, a couple of chairs, and some pallets of straw on the floor. On these latter children were sleeping just as they had come in from the street. Walls, ceiling and floor were filthy with dirt, and the stench was stifling.

It is only at night that the Italian quarter can be seen at its worst. There are the same dirt and bad smells in the daytime, but the men and children are then mostly absent—the former at work and the latter on the down-town streets begging, stealing, and in other ways trying to scrape together the amount of money which the padrone has named as the stint. In most cases this is 50 cents for each child. Those who bring this sum back with them at night get some kind of food and shelter and escape punishment; those who fail are starved and beaten.

Ewing street, from Canal to Desplaines, is full of padrones' dens, and most of them are counterparts of that first described. One room, dark, filthy and devoid of the commonest kind of sanitary conveniences, will house half a dozen people. The man who rents two rooms is looked upon as a sort of Vanderbilt or a crazy profligate. Tony Masch is the swell of Ewing street because he has a suite of two rooms in the Garibaldi Building, a great rambling structure with many devious and confusing passages, through which no stranger could possibly make his way unpiloted. Masch is one of the law-abiding Italians who frowns upon the padrone system, but thinks it merely a matter of good health to keep his mouth shut. This matter of sullen retention of knowledge is one of the hardest things the police have to cope with. Murderous affrays are common among the Italians, but it is exceedingly difficult to make an arrest or secure a conviction because even the victims refuse to give information. The stiletto is ever ready for the informer.

On Forquer street, not far from Jefferson, lives a padrone who is waxing fat off the pickings of twelve little children in various stages of productiveness. Some travel about with wheezy concertinas, others peddle newspapers, others sell chewing gum, and others get money in questionable ways. But they all bring grist to his financial mill every night or they go supperless to bed and feel the weight of a stick as well.

From this den the party made its way through a dark alley, cluttered with refuse, to the rear of a black, forbidding-looking building on Desplaines street. A sudden yanking open of the door by the combined efforts of the four officers revealed a crowd of desperate men huddled in a small room. On the faces of all was plainly written the fear of arrest, and the assurance that nobody was wanted seemed to give relief to all of them. This building is the one from which Capt. Wheeler's officers in December last took a padrone named Mosielli and his wife, Lucy, on the charge of having deliberately burned out the eyes of three children for begging purposes. When the children were first found they refused to say a word against the padrone, and it was not until they were given to the care of a reputable Italian woman and tenderly treated that the terrible story was coaxed out of them. Capt. Wheeler, who made a personal investigation of the case, was satisfied that Mosielli would be sent to the penitentiary, but at the trial the same old difficulty of securing testimony was encountered, and the man escaped with a year in the bridewell. As subsequent events proved, the case was not an unusual one among the padrones. Other instances were found in which children had been deliberately mutilated in various ways so as to excite the sympathy of charitable people and make sure the giving of alms, but in no case has it been possible to get the evidence necessary for a conviction.

Back from Mosielli's old den the party traced its way through a maze of blind alleys and ill-smelling garbage boxes to Mather street, where the officers arrived at a house just in time to prevent a man from beating a boy with a club. Even then the youngster was sullen in his misery and refused to give the policemen any information, and the old rascal of a padrone actually laughed at the officers in contempt. Outside this place the party lingered some time in the hope that a renewal of the attack would give them excuse for making an arrest, but the padrone was too sly to be thus captured. Late as was the hour, many of the little while slaves were just returning home to report to their masters and hand over the financial results of their day's work. Through streets and alleys they came silently like rats, those who had money pushing along carelessly, while the unfortunate who had failed in their task hung back, dreading to encounter the fierce padrone and yet afraid to remain away longer than the appointed time. It was a mournful sort of procession, this return of the child chattels, and even the stolid policemen, inured to countless repetitions of the scene, could not forbear from commenting upon it.

In this manner the party tramped about the padrone quarter for nearly three hours, looking into all sorts of miserable holes, few of them fit to shelter a self-respecting dog, and yet all inhabited by human beings. Cellars and garrets alike were crowded with men, women and children of varying ages, from the wee mite of a boy just large enough to scrape a few notes out of a wheezy violin, to girls just merging into womanhood. In every place some one man was in supreme control, and none disputed his authority as "boss." If there was any talking done with the officers it was the "boss" who acted as spokesman, and the others maintained an inquisitive silence alert to what was going on, but never speaking a word.

Suddenly emerging from a dark alley into Halsted street the glare of the gaslights blinded for a moment even the veteran officers, and they nearly stumbled over a poor wretch of a girl sitting on the curbstone and shivering with cold. Unlike the other unfortunates, she was rebellious in her determination, and willing to talk, a willingness which was increased by the gift of a quarter and the promise of police protection.

"'Fraid to go home," said the girl in broken English. "Got no money and padrone beat me. Must have 50 cents. No money, no supper, no bed, get licking to-night. Then to-morrow no breakfast—must bring in dollar to-morrow to make up for to-day."

Postage Stamps.

The design of the stamp is engraved on steel, and, in printing, plates are used on which 200 stamps have been engraved. Two men are kept busy at work covering these with colored inks, and passing them to a man and a girl who are equally busy printing them with large rolling hand presses. Three of these little squads are employed all the time. After the small sheets of paper containing 200 printed stamps have dried enough they are sent into another room and gummed. The gum made for this purpose is a peculiar composition, made of the powder of dried potatoes and other vegetables, mixed with water. After having been again dried—this time on little racks fanned by steam power—for about an hour, they are very carefully put between sheets of pasteboard and pressed in hydraulic presses capable of applying a weight of 2,000 tons. The next thing is to cut the sheets in two, each sheet, of course, when cut, containing 100 stamps. This is done by a girl with a large pair of shears, cutting by hand being preferred to that by machinery, which would destroy too many stamps. They are then passed to another squad of workers, who perforate the paper between the stamps. Next they are pressed once more and then packed and labeled and stowed away, to be sent out to the various offices when ordered. If a single stamp is torn or in any way mutilated, the whole sheet of 100 stamps is burned. Not less than 50,000 are said to be burned every week from this cause. The greatest care is taken in counting the sheets of stamps, to guard against pilfering by the employes.—Ashton Recorder.

Shaker Relic Discovered.

In the old shaker settlement at Sonyea, N. Y., a peculiar relic has been discovered. It consists of a stone about 2½x4½ feet and four inches thick which is covered with inscriptions, though most of them are so badly defaced that they cannot be deciphered. But the words "The Lord's Stone," and the date, "1847," are sufficient to identify the stone as connected with the worship of the Shakers. It was found by workmen in excavating for a building that is to stand directly on the site of the Shaker meeting-house. The stone is supposed to be a sort of "kissing stone." It has been turned over to the Historical Society of Mount Morris and will be preserved in a glass case. No doubt some process can be devised by which its inscriptions can be deciphered more fully. The characteristic reticence of the Shakers has made information in regard to them difficult to obtain, and anything of the nature of a historical relic will be highly prized.

Tapestry of an Empress.

A Paris correspondent writes: The Gobelins are engaged on a tapestry for the Empress Alexandra which they expect to finish by May 1, 1900. It represents the original painting of Marie Antoinette and her children that hangs at the Elysee. The painter was Mme. Vigee Lebrun. The young empress was greatly struck by its beauty, and thought it deeply interesting.

M. Faure made a note of this, and asked the fine arts minister to consult with the director of the Gobelins as to the best means to secure a good copy. Three of the best artist weavers were set to work last February. They work alternately, so as to be busy only two days in the week, and thus keep their eyes fresh. They are now at the figures. The dyeing and sorting of the wools was a tedious and troublesome work.

Cementing Leather to Iron.

To cement leather to iron, cut the leather roughly to shape, allowing about one inch per foot in the width of the pulley. Then soak the leather in water until it is wet through. Now stretch it well in the direction of the circumference of the pulley and cut it to exact shape and length. It should next be sewn up butt to butt with a shoemaker's awl and thread, and the leather, having been stretched in the direction of the circumference only, will, as it gets dry, have a tendency to resume its former shape, thereby shortening in circumference and "clip" to the pulley. A shallow groove might be made for the stitches to sink in.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,

FRIDAY, JANUARY 28.....1898

The nomination of ex-United States Senator Tabor for postmaster of Denver is one of the most graceful acts of the present administration. Tabor did more than any other man toward the advancement of Denver, and now, while he is laboring with pick and shovel in the mining regions of Colorado, endeavoring to retrieve his fallen fortunes, all men will heartily commend the helping hand that has been extended him in time of need.

Unprofitable Economy.

Congressman Loud of California is actively pushing his pet measure—the bill to alter the present laws relating to second-class mail matter. This bill failed of passage at the last session of Congress, and it is to be hoped that it will again meet a like fate. The bill places a host of restrictions upon publishers, and practically leaves them at the mercy of the postmaster-general's whim. Under its provisions the cheap paper editions of Dickens, Scott and other standard authors must advance in price, as the publishers of such works will be debarred from sending them through the mails at the present rate of postage, one cent per pound. Instead they will be mailable at eight cents per pound, which, as these books frequently weigh as much as a pound, will advance prices to the public to that extent. If Mr. Loud should devote his energies to reducing the exhorbitant rates now paid to the railroads by the Government, for the transportation of mails, he would speedily transform the annual deficiency in the postal department to a surplus.

The abuse of the franking privilege by our national legislators, who annually flood the mails with a vast amount of political literature under the guise of "public documents," is one of the chief causes of a deficiency in our postal revenues. If Congressman Loud is sincere in his desire to department self-sustaining, why not restrict this vast and useless volume of post-free mail matter instead of placing a tax on the people's reading matter as proposed in his bill now pending in Congress? And while pursuing this subject, would it not be well to ascertain how much of the Government's money is expended in printing and preparing these alleged public documents. Perhaps a saving might be made in other departments on the same line.

THE CHIPMUNK.

How He Rouses Himself and Welcomes the Spring.

As the woodchuck sleeps away the bitterness of cold, so in his narrower chamber sleeps the chipmunk. Happy little hermit, lover of the sun, mate of the song sparrow and the butterflies, what a goodly and hopeful token of the earth's renewed life is he, verifying the promises of his own chalices, the squirrel cups, set in the warmest corners of the woodside, with libations of dew and shower drops, of the bluebird's carol, the sparrow's song of spring!

He comes forth from his long night into the fullness of the sunlit day, to proclaim his awakening to his summer comrades, a gay recluse clad all in the motley, a jester, maybe, yet no fool.

His voice, for all its monotony, is inspiring of gladness and contentment, whether he utters his thin, sharp chirp or full mouthed cluck, or laughs a chittering mockery as he scurries in at his narrow door.

He winds along his crooked pathway of the fence rails and forages for half forgotten nuts in the familiar grounds, brown with strewn leaves or dun with dead grass. Sometimes he ventures to the top rail and climbs to a giddy ten foot height on a tree, whence he looks abroad, wondering, on the wide expanse of an acre.

Music hath charms for him, and you can entrance him with a softly whistled tune and entice him to frolic with a blade of grass head gently moved before him. [illegible] made the white [illegible] into cheese for [illegible] chipmunk, it is [illegible] him gathering [illegible] and tediously stripping on [illegible] covers, filling his cheek [illegible] the dainty disks and [illegible] to the cellar with his [illegible] Alack the day [illegible] of the sprouting corn [illegible], for then he [illegible] and the sud- [illegible] announces his [illegible] the secret of [illegible] house, with- [illegible] a show of heaped or scattered soil [illegible] Bearing himself hon- [illegible] his enemies, the cat, [illegible] the boy, he lives a long [illegible] of happy, inoffensive life. Then [illegible] the filmy curtain of the Indian [illegible] falls upon the year again he [illegible] good night.—"New England Woods."

Bagpipes In New Guinea.

Mr. Angus MacKenzie, an old miner well known as a prospector in northern Queensland, Australia, recently arrived from New Guinea with a large quantity of gold and thinks there is a great advantage in being a Scotchman. When he left for New Guinea, he took bagpipes with him, and to their agency he attributes much of the luck which fell to his lot while prospecting for gold. He said that the natives would do anything for him, providing he played the pipes to them at night. They looked after him and his effects and acted as porters without other pay than the music of the pipes. They took him over new country and showed him where heavy gold could be obtained. It is possible that intending prospectors in New Guinea might lay out their money to worse advantage than in the purchase of bagpipes. In any case, Mr. MacKenzie regards the pipes as the best and most judicious investment he ever made.—New York Sun.

HENRY IRVING AS A JOKER.

He and Toole Made a Tipsy Waiter Repent Temporarily.

Sir Henry Irving tells an amusing story of a joke that he, with Mr. Toole and a third party, played some years ago at a Glasgow hotel. After their work they were supping at the hotel, where, says Sir Henry, "there was in the room a high screen. The instant the waiter was gone we commenced operations. We stripped the silverware, of which there was a tolerable supply, from the table and placed it behind the screen. We then opened the window and turned out the gas, and finally all got under the table. We had only to remain in our cramped position a few minutes before we heard the unsteady feet of our friend, the waiter, along the passage.

"The darkened room amazed him and the cold air from the window seemed to strike him with affright.

"'Goodness!' exclaimed he, 'it's thieves they are. A thocht as much frae the luiks o' them, and frae their gay talk and their lauchter. Eh, but I'm a ruined man. A wish a' had nae taen the hale o' that last bottle. Hear! Hear! Thieves! Thieves! Murder! Thieves! Thieves!' and shouting at the top of his voice he ran out of the room and along the passage.

"The minute he had gone we shut the door, lit the gas, restored the silver to the table and sat round as before, enjoying a quiet cigar. Presently there was a confused murmur along the passage. It grew louder and louder, and in poured a truly motley throng, mostly half dressed, consisting of the manager, two men in bare legs and slippers, and a lady with a blanket, in the alarm of fear caught up, followed by our agonized friend, the waiter. One man was armed with a poker and the other carried a bronze statuette ready to hurl at the thief. As they entered we all sat back and looked at them in well feigned amazement, and Toole said to the astonished and bewildered manager, 'Do you always come in this way with your friends when a gentleman asks for his bill?'"—London Telegraph.

THE MAKING OF POISON.

A Factory Where the Most Deadly Drugs Are Prepared.

In London is a strange establishment, behind a wilderness of warehouses and tumbledown tenements, in a remote suburb. Its massive gates are locked and jealously guarded. A visitor must not only be careful where he steps and refrain from touching, he must also breathe with great caution. One of the terrible poisons manufactured here is pure anhydrous acid, a drug seldom seen outside a chemical laboratory. This is the deadliest of all known poisons. The discoverer was stricken dead from inhaling its fumes. From 3 to 5 per cent of this chemical added to 95 or 97 parts of water makes prussic acid. This diluted poison causes instant death, even when taken in minute quantities.

Next to anhydrous acid, the worst poison they make is cyanide of potassium. Last year they turned out over 1,000 tons of it. Five grains being a fatal dose, the annual output would be sufficient to kill 2,500,000 people. In the workroom, where men are gathered around a witch's caldron containing over a hundred weight of molten cyanide, a strange picture is presented. The seething mass of white hot liquid poison, with the lambent play of the furnace fires, the phantom faces of the workmen, enveloped in an uncanny looking glass mask, peering into the heart of the dreadful mixture through the thick atmosphere, are a terrible sight. In another room, where are tons of the finished product, looking like crystalized sugar, "good enough to eat," one man is never allowed alone. For some inexplicable reason it exercises a strange fascination for the men who inhale its fumes. They are haunted by a desire to eat it. But, knowing that satisfying the craving means instant death, most, but not all, are able to resist it. Aside from this fascination its manufacture is not considered unhealthy. The same cannot be said of corrosive sublimate. Its fumes are deadly.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

His Bonus.

They were just closing up the real estate deal, and the man who always wanted something thrown in to make a good bargain appeared to hesitate.

"What'll you throw in?"

"What'll I what?"

"What'll you throw in as a sort of bonus?"

"Oh, yes, yes, of course!" said the real estate man. "How stupid of me! Why, the fact is, in our line of business we are not exactly in the habit of giving prizes, but, in this case, just to make it binding, I don't mind throwing in the back taxes."

"Now you're talking business!" exclaimed the would be purchaser. "It always pays for a man to stick out for his rights."

It was only after the transfer was made that he discovered the back taxes were payable by and not to the owner.—Chicago Post.

Devonshire Terrace.

Dickens was 27 years old when, in 1839, he moved from Doughty street to Devonshire terrace. George du Maurier lived for some years in 1 Devonshire terrace.

In this now celebrated house Dickens wrote no fewer than ten of his books: "The Old Curiosity Shop," "Barnaby Rudge," "The Christmas Carol," "American Notes," "Martin Chuzzlewit," "The Haunted Man," "The Battle of Life," "Dombey and Son," "The Cricket on the Hearth" and "David Copperfield." Devonshire terrace was situated at the corner of the Marylebone road and used to be called the smallest terrace in London.

The new Democratic Congressional Committee tonight elected as chairman Senator White of California. The election has attracted a good deal of attention in the House, owing to its bearing on the Speakership contest. Senator White was supported by the friends of Representative Bailey, who are favorable to that gentleman's candidacy in case the next House is Democratic. The committee adopted a resolution affirming its adherence to the Chicago platform. The election of Senator White was regarded as a distinct triumph for the silver men, who were anxious to have a chairman whose record on the subject of 16 to 1 was unquestionable.

On the morning of the 19th fire broke out in an empty building between the Mojave and White Fawn saloons at Randsburg, but owing to the lack of water nothing could be done to check the progress of the fire, and in a short time over thirty buildings were consumed. The loss was about $100,000, with little or no insurance.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

TUESDAY, Jan. 25, 1898.

In the matter of the estate of R. M. Todd. deceased—Letters of admistration granted to I. J. Woodin.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 26.

Maggie Hughes vs. Thomas Hughes—Decree of divorce granted.

THURSDAY, Jan. 27.

In the matter of H. D. Gill, insolvent debtor—order allowing assignee to compound debt of Mrs. N. G. Webb.

Real Estate Transfers

J. W. Riggs to J. B. Collett—lot in town of Bishop, $10.00.

Jacob Hodge to L. F. J. Wrinkle—Property known as Moffette ranch at George's Creek, $2,500.

Joe Levy and Paul Maris were on the sick list this week.

Hon. T. B. Rickey will arrive at Independence on this evening's train.

J. White Smith, Esq., came down from Bishop Wednesday, returning yesterday.

District Attorney Forbes was at Bishop in the early part of the week on Justice Court business.

A social dance was given at Mair's Hall last Saturday evening which was well attended.

J. C. Crocker arrived at Independence on Wednesday on his way home to Big Pine from a trip to Bakersfield.

A. C. McDonald of Big Pine and P. W. Forbes of Independence were appointed Notaries Public by Gov. Budd last Friday.

Miss Addie Lewis started for San Francisco yesterday morning, after a month spent at Independence visiting with her mother.

Ernest Laird was at Bishop last Monday engaged in reporting the LaPlant examination in Justice Dunlap's Court. He returned home Tuesday.

The weather moderated this morning after the longest period of continuous cold weather known in this vicinity for a number of years. The indications are favorable for a heavy fall of snow.

Ernest LaPlant was examined by Justice Dunlap last Monday on a charge of selling whisky to Indians and committed for trial in the Superior Court. Constable Billy Smith brought him down from Bishop on Tuesday, and he is now in the County Jail awaiting trial.

Indian School.

Stark M. Conser, Inspector of Indian Schools, arrived at Independence Wednesday evenieg. The Indians of Camp Independence and vicinity raised enough money by subscription to erect a good school building, and it is understood that the object of Mr. Conser's visit here is to engage a suitable teacher. The Indians have certainly showed sufficient interest in the matter to warrant the government granting their assistance. There are upward of thirty children who will attend.

Accidentally Shot

A man named Quigley McDermott, who has been working at the Defiance mine for the past four months, was accidentally shot in the saloon of M Larius at Darwin on Thursday morning about 3 o'clock. He, with several others, had been drinking during the night, and he was sitting near the stove when some one present whose name is not given dropped a pistol and the hammer struck the floor in such a manner that the weapon was discharged, the bullet entering the right arm midway between the elbow and shoulder, penetrating and shattering the bone and lodging in the inner fleshy part of the arm. C. H. Prahn brought the wounded man to Independence, and his arm was dressed this morning by Dr. Woodin. It is a nasty wound, and it will be quite a while before he will be around again.

Gold Yield of the Pacific Coast

It is estimated that at the time of the discovery of gold in California, on January 24, 1848, the total gold available in the whole world was not more than five thousand millions of dollars

In the sixteenth century, 1493 to 1600, the gross gold product for the 108 years amounted to $591,693,337, which is an annual production of $4,647,897

During the seventeenth century the gold product of the whole world was $606,063,000 per annum.

In the eighteenth century the gold product was $1,262,806,400, the annual product being $12,628,064

In the nineteenth century, from 1801 to the end of 1847, the annual average production of gold in the whole world was a little over $11,000,000. From 1849 to 1860 inclusive, the annual gold production for the whole world averaged the enormous total of, in round numbers, $134,000,000. During this same period the average annual production of California was not less than $61,000,000.

Up to the year 1897 the gross gold product of California was fully $1,400,000,000, being an average annual production of $28,000,000 since the discovery of gold in this stat in 1848.

The maximum gold yield in California for any one year was $85,000,000, and the minimum $11,000,000, this decline following on the cessation of hydraulic mining.

During the past four years, however, under the wise administration of the United States Mining Commissioners, hydraulic mining is on the increase, and this, with the renewed interest in gravel and quartz mining, has resulted in a gradual increase in our production of gold. When the figures for 1897 are all in we will doubtless find that our production for that year was not less than $18,000,000.

The discovery of gold in California was not only important on account of the rich harvest which followed in this State, but also on account of the stimulus which it gave to the search for gold througout the whole world. Even the long neglected and almost forgotten gold mines of Great Britain were reopened as a result of this stimulus, and they are producing some gold even down to the present time.

The most important result which flowed from this, however, was the discovery on the Australian continent, where the results from placer mining have exceed those of our own State, and even in quartz mining they are pressing us hard for supremacy.

It was our own hardy "forty-niners" who, in the search for gold in other localities, discovered th great Comstock lode, which has yielded $400,000,000, 45 per cent of which, it must not be forgotten, was in gold.

These same hardy prospectors traversed every foot of Nevada, and to their energy is due the enormous silver discoveries in Pioche, Eureka and other districts At Eureka, too, they solved a new problem in metallurgy—the economical treatment of low-grade lead ores.

These resolute miners spread still farther out and invaded Utah, Montana, Idaho and Colorado, with results which are part of the world's history. In this remote regions they did not find, it is true, the golden nugget of California, but found the precious metals combined with baser ingredients, and to separate these has been productive of an enormous activity among the brightest scientific and mechanical minds of the world.

As a result of all this pioneering the gross gold product of the United States for the past year was not less than $55,000,000. It must be remembered, too, that the skill and experience of the California miner has been extensively utilized in the gold fields of South Africa, and that the Transvaal, for the area mined, is the largest gold producer in the world.

Taken as a whole the gross gold production of the world during 1897 was fully $260,000,000, and it is safe to predict that by the end of the century the annual yield will be quite $300,000,000.

Even these figures may be largely exceeded if the recent discoveries in Alaska fulfill anything like the expectations built on them. The miner who see experience has been confined to California will find many new difficulties to meet and overcome in inhospitable Alaska. There will be frozen ground to blast and only ice for sluicing purposes during at least nine monts of the year.

California, despite the fact that it has been mined for half a century, has really been prospected only in part, and it stands still unrivalled in extent of gold bearing area and facilities for economical mining—facts which should be remembered by those who are casting yearning glances toward Alaska.—Call.

The Pioneers

The San Francisco Post, in an article on the Jubilee, pays this eloquent tribute to the '49er:

"The pioneers of California have accomplished their mission, and they have done their work well. They are the fathers of the commonwealth, and they deserve the honor that posterity gladly bestows upon them California was destined to be a great State even without the impetus that it received from the discovery of gold, but that accident and the resultant circumstances hastened the event. It gathered speedily from every nation the best product of their population—the youth, the vigor, the bone and sinew, the brain and the brawn of civilization. All that came afterward was but cumulative energy; the pioneers had laid the foundation, and the others could only finish the structure as the architects had planned.

"These men were not only gold seekers—they were public-spirited American citizens who adapted themselves readily to any emergency; they were indomitable of purpose, courageous in enterprise, persistent in effort, resourceful, intelligent, patriotic, ambitious, true to the core of their honest hearts.

"They are passing away—these men of the aforetime. When the people of California shall erect arches and drape the cities with the colors of the next jubilee, and throng the streets in vaster numbers than they thronged today—when their eloquent men shall tell to eager listening thousands how it came to pass that a century of prosperity has rolled round to the second commemoration of this modern "going for the golden fleece"—in that distant day none of these argonauts will be there to witness the joy and gratitude of the multitude—they will not, with mortal vision, see the perfected result of their handiwork; but they will not be forgotten. Their deeds may be the fabric of tradition; their memory may be mellowed through the mists of the drifting years; but in that day men will say: "They were the choice and master spirits of their age." It will not be said that they builded better than they knew, for they had lived to see the fruition of their hopes and their endeavor, but it will be recorded of them that what they builded was good, and upon the pedestal of the monument which they have erected their names will be inscribed, that generations yet to be born may read and reverence."

The Discovery of Gold By Marshall

Toward the close of the Mexican War, John A. Sutter, a Swiss immigrant, who came to California in 1839, and settled at a place which he afterward named New Helvetia, occupied the fort which took his name and which has passed into the history of the State, as the place from which was heralded to the world the first discovery of gold in California.

Sutter's Fort was surrounded by an adobe wall 20 feet in height, which enclosed about an acre of ground. Within this enclosure, on either side of the fort, also stood two block houses two storis in height, and two old iron ship's guns frowned within the massive gate which was closed and closely guarded at night. Indians of both sexes were the servitors of the old autocrat, for autocrat he was, as under the Mexican rule he held even the lives of his serfs in his hand and inflicted punishment even to death when occasion seemed to demand. Sutter had for some time been contemplating the erection of a grist mill when, in 1847, a roving adventurer from New Jersey, named James Wilson Marshall, arrived at New Helvetia. As he was a handy man with tools and a millwright, though without education and of a rather convival disposition, he soon obtained employment from Sutter, who engaged him to hunt up a good mill site. He started out with a "grub stake" and was absent about a month, when he returned and reported that he had located a suitable site on the north fork of the American river, at the point now known as Coloma, about sixty miles northeast of where Sacramento now stands.

Sutter approved the selection and men were employed to build the mill under the superintendency of Marshall, who was also to run the mill when built. It was complered by the middle of January, but when ready to start it was found that the race was not deep enough to carry off the water from the wheel, and Marshall, to expedite matters, concluded to scour it deeper with a swift current; acting on this idea he opened the flood gates, and let the water run all night. On the morning of the 18th, or according to some historians, the 19th of January, 1848, Marshall shut down the gates and walked down to examine the race. He saw that when the rush of water had washed the bottom and sides a great quantity of gravel had been piled up at the end of the ditch. While looking at the gravel he saw some shining substance and picked it up. It looked like gold, but he thought perhaps it was sulphuret of iron But he knew that gold is malleable and iron sulphuret is not, so he pounded the substance between two stones to test it. It was malleable! It was gold!

Hastening back to camp he exhibited his specimens to the workmen. He then jumped on a horse and rode over to Sutter's mill, where he held a private conference with his employer, who applied the acid test and found that Marshall had indeed discovered gold.

Sutter was at that time building a mill near New Helvetia, and he was fearful of losing all his workmen if the news leaked out, so it was agreed by him and Marshall that the secret should be kept for six weeks, when the mill should be completed.

But there was a woman in Marshall's camp, Mrs. P. L. Wimmer, who did the cooking for the "hands" at the mill, got confidential with a teamster one day and told him of Marshall's find. The news spread like fire on a prairie, and Sutter's mill near Helvetia was never completed. A large amount of leather was left to rot in the vats of his tannery and men went wild with the gold fever. Sutter himself caught the contagion, and with 100 Indians, 50 Sandwich Islanders and a train of wagons loaded with provisions, started for the "diggins." When the news reached San Francisco, a town at that time of about 450 inhabitants, it quickly became almost depopulated. Once started, the glowing reports of gold fields in California continued to spread to all quarters of the globe. Men were taking out by the pan from $10 to $100 per day each, and wages were from $10 to $50 per day. Sutter received $100 per month rent for single rooms at Helvetia from store-keepers, and one of the two-story block houses was rented for $500 per month. Ravines and gulches were filled with miners and gold was in everybody's hands.

Thus commenced the golden era in California, which has continued since, with every prospect of remaining for years, perhaps centuries to come.—Mining and Electrical Review.

Gov. Budd's Stewardship

A recent issue of the Fresno Expositor devotes over ten columns to a resume of Governor Budd's administration. In summarizing, it says:

"Governor Budd's most partisan and prejudiced critics cannot deny that under his administration many reforms have been effected, many wise policies inaugurated and many important economies, aggregating large sums, and many of them permanent and recurring, have been realized.

"It is an indisputable fact that several new institutions and commissions but recently established were turned over to Governor Budd to maintain, that the number of inmates in all the State institutions has increased, and that the necessary expenses of government were greater under him than previously. It is an equally indisputable fact that the tax levy for the two years preceding his assuming office was $11,972,573, and that even this levy left $1,727,791 for Governor Budd to pay or provide for; while the levy for the last two years of this administration is only $10,020,000, and debts inherited from past administrations have been paid, the government is being satisfactorily operated, her debts paid as soon as due, and a very substantial surplus is being accumulated to turn over to a succeeding administration. These facts need no comment.

One of the best results of the governor's administration has been the shaking up he has given the management of all departments of the state government, making all boards and officers feel a sense of responsibility, placing checks upon their expenditures and putting them upon their guard as to the conduct of their offices.

"Under Governor Budd, the "one twenty-fourth" clause was first placed in the general appropriation bill, necessitating economy in expending appropriations from the very beginning.

The normal schools have been reorganized and placed on higher educational levels; the state hospitals for the insane have been placed in harmony, their management rendered uniform and economical and their over-crowding prevented. A primary election law has been adopted, the "good roads" crusade vigorously prosecuted, a system of river improvement inaugurated, a foreign market opened for our dried fruit product, business methods introduced into all the departments, civil service established in the hospitals and the normal shools, the purchase of home products required by all public purchasing agencies, the university properly endowed our cattle interest given prompt attention, a "pure food law adopted and a general movement for its active enforcement commenced. The dairy interest has received the attention its importance demands, and with a vigorous versatility possible with few men, every industry in our state has felt his touch and received an impetus from his wisdom. All this has been accomplished in a growing state, with a reduced expenditure, and when the field of Governor Budd's activity is surveyed by the impartial and judicious, his critics are silenced and his friends are vindicated.

The Democratic party, by its splendid standard-bearer of three years ago, has much more than redeemed its promises.

The Mining and Scientific Press of San Francisco of the 29th inst., will be a Golden Jubilee edition—something to read with interest and put away for reference. It will contain fifty-two pages, and be of historic value to miners everywhere. One of the articles will show conclusively that the real anniversary of the discovery of gold by Marshall is January 19.

Judge McKenna has been confirmed as one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

NEVER CONTENT.

Some people are never content with anything. They will not find exactly what they want even in Heaven, if they know some one is there ahead of them. For instance, some are great sufferers from neuralgia. Friends have told them what is best and certain to cure them. Not content with what is said, they suffer on. Pain ravages and devastates the system, and leaves it a barren waste. St. Jacobs Oil has cured thousands. Just try it.

The Profits of Monte Carlo.

The merchant whose losses are the result of untoward and unforeseen changes in the market receives sympathy and help, but what bank or private friend will advance money to a gambler? The betting man who has staked his last shilling and lost it is pronounced a fool and has put himself beyond the reach of practical compassion. The sharper who has fleeced him has neither gratitude nor pity. He uses his victim as the butt of his ridicule. And the victim himself, who has risked his money on mere chance, or on baseless information, or on fraudulent representations, freely pronounces himself a fool, judging himself in the light of the issue. To fancy that we shall be exceptions and win where others have lost, that we shall be the solitary lucky ones among the thousands unlucky, is a folly to which we are all liable, but it is none the less a folly.

It is stated that the winnings of the table or bank at Monte Carlo last year amounted to £800,000—that is to say, this was the net sum lost by those who played. Yet each gambler who stakes his little pile fancies he will be the one to win. There are some thousands of bookmakers in our own country. Out of whose pockets do they pick so comfortable a living? Out of the pockets of their dupes, who so bountifully contribute to the maintenance of their worst enemies.—Good Words.

THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS.

When the Declaration of Independence asserted man's right to this, it enunciated an immortal truth. The bilious sufferer is on the road to happiness when he begins to take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the most efficacious regulator of the liver in existence. Equally reliable is it in chills and fever, constipation, dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney trouble and nervousness. Use it regularly, and not at odd intervals.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MOTHERS.

We are asserting in the courts our right to the exclusive use of the word "CASTORIA," and "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," as our Trade Mark.

I, Dr. Samuel Pitcher, of Hyannis, Massachusetts, was the originator of "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," the same that has borne and does now bear the fac simile signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on every wrapper. This is the original "PITCHER'S CASTORIA" which has been used in the homes of the mothers of America for over thirty years. Look Carefully at the wrapper and see that it is the kind you have always bought, and has the signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on the wrapper. No one has authority from me to use my name except The Centaur Company of which Chas. H. Fletcher is President.

Last Chance!

The $2000.00 missing-word contest closes December 31st.

Result will be announced about January 15th.

Schilling's Best baking powder and tea are _____ because they are money-back.

What is the missing word?—not SAFE, although Schilling's Best baking powder and tea are safe.

Get Schilling's Best baking powder or tea at your grocers'; take out the ticket (brown ticket in every package of baking powder; yellow ticket in the tea); send a ticket with each word to address below before December 31st.

Until October 15th two words allowed for every ticket; after that only one word for every ticket.

If only one person finds the word, that person gets $2000.00; if several find it, $2000.00 will be equally divided among them.

Every one sending a brown or yellow ticket will receive a set of cardboard creeping babies at the end of the contest. Those sending three or more in one envelope will receive an 1898 pocket calendar—no advertising on it. These creeping babies and pocket calendars will be different from the ones offered in the last contest.

Better cut these rules out.

THE MOUNTAIN MAID.

She Had a Natural Anxiety, Which She Made Manifest.

As my horse, puffing like a porpoise, drew me and my buckboard up the last sharp acclivity of the mountain road that led out into the pass between the summits rising on either hand he would have exercised his privilege and stopped a moment to blow, but 100 yards ahead of us I saw a bright bit of calico gleaming in the morning sun, and, driving on, I came up to a buxom mountain maid sitting on a stump at a point where a footpath leading up from the valley met the main road.

"Good mornin," she said before I had a chance to stop, and there seemed to be an anxious tone in the voice.

"Good morning," I responded, and I was on the point of asking her how far it was to the next place, a favorite manner of starting a conversation on mountain roads, when she broke in.

"Air you a preacher?" she asked. "No," I answered, with a smile, for I had never been asked that question before.

"Nor a squire?"

"No."

"Well, Jim Martin's comin along this away purty soon now, an I wuz jis' axin so's thar wouldn't be no mistakes."

"I don't quite understand your explanation," I said, completely in the dark as to what she was trying to get at.

"I reckon not, but I ain't takin no chances, an I thought I'd better stop you while I had the chance."

"Thank you, I'm sure, but if you will tell me what's up I may be able to know what you are talking about."

She laughed good naturedly.

"Well, you see it's this a-way," she said. "Jim, he's been a-courtin an a-sparkin round me fer about two ye'r now, an last night he popped an says ez how ef I'd be here this mornin ez he come along we'd go down to Logville an git hitched, an Jim's mighty onreliable, an like's not ef we got thar an the preacher ner the squire warn't thar I'd never git Jim in the mind ag'in, so I kinder thought mebbe you might be the squire er the preacher an I didn't want you to git away. Ef you meet Jim anywheres down the road, don't tell him you seen me, fer I don't want him skeert."—Washington Star.

ABOUT THE WEATHER.

Mr. Wingleby Explains to Georgie About the Seasons.

"You see, Georgie," said Mr. Wingleby, whose youthful son had asked him how we came to have different kinds of weather, "the weather is put up in tin cans, a day's weather to a can, and usually they put up about a year's supply ahead, enough to last through a spring, summer, autumn and winter. In filling the cans they sort it all out as well as possible. Sometimes when they get a can full there may be a little left over, and whatever remains in this way they throw into one lot. When they've got pretty nearly all the cans full and the regular stock of weather has run out, they fill up from that lot of odds and ends. The cans so filled contain what is called variable weather, because it's mixed, but most of the weather they get pretty well sorted out according to the season.

"When they've got all the cans filled, they stack 'em up where they'll be handy to get at, and there's a man that does nothing but open them. Every day he cuts a can and pours out the weather for that day, and of course a great deal depends upon him. Sometimes this man gets careless and pulls down a lot of the wrong cans, getting them, say, from the July shelf in the month of April and likely as not getting down a week's supply at once, so as to have them handy on the opening table. Of course he discovers his mistake the first can he opens, but he is too lazy to put the rest back, and so he keeps on then until he has opened them all, and that's how it comes about, as it sometimes does, that we get a hot spell at a season when we ought to have nothing but cool weather.

"But of course those April cans are not lost. They must be around somewhere, and we get 'em later. Maybe the man will sprinkle them along with the hope that we won't notice them much, but as likely as not he opens them one after another together, maybe after some terribly hot spell in July or August, when they are sure to be a blessed relief, and if he does this we are pretty apt to forgive him his mistake in April."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

ABEL, HULDY, AND THE RAM.

ONCE I was passing through the little town of Greenville, in the Pennsylvania hemlock belt," said John Gilbert, the traveling groceryman "and stopped at the tavern there. The only man I saw at first was a jolly looking, red-faced little old man, on whom care or sorrow seemed to have never laid a finger.

"'Fine day,' I said, getting off my buckboard.

"'P'tic'lar fine an' cheerful,' the little old man said. 'I hain't see a cheerfuller day in forty years an' better.'

"Then he went down the road whistling. I was gazing after him yet when some one said:

"'It's a leetle queer that Uncle Abel went away without waitin' to see whether you wa'n't going to buy sumpin' an' ast him in; but he's feelin' overpowerin' glib to-day, an' mebbe thought nothin' could make him feel any better.'

"This speaker, as I saw when I turned to look, was a tall and slim and lanky, and was whittling a stick. He had come from the barn, and, as I found, was the landlord. I walked in.

"'Yes,' said the lanky man, 'Uncle Abel is feelin' overpowerin' glib to-day. You wouldn't take him to be a lone an' lorn widderer, which the pardner of his bosom was only laid away yiste'day, now, would you?'

"I had to admit that the old gentleman was a trifle chipper and cheerful for one so recently bereaved.

"'Yes,' the landlord went on, 'Aunt Huldy's left Uncle Abel at last. It was sort of an accident like, though. I don't think she ever would a-thought o' doin' of it, 'cause Uncle Abel was four that Aunt Huldy had handled, an' she had wore black bombazine fer three on 'em, an' it was jest as good as ever, that black bombazine was, an' there ain't no kind o' doubt that she had a stiff idee o' wearin' it fer Uncle Abel, an' mebbe fer somebody that had the courage to be No. 5. You see, Uncle Abel is the harmlessest man that ever sot round, an' Aunt Huldy's disposition was sot sumpin' like a cross-cut saw, an' when she got to movin' she was a ripper. How would some fresh tansy schunched in a glass and moistened with about three fingers o' J'maky rum strike you?'

"I was willing to risk it, and the lanky but garrulous landlord scrunched the tansy and moistened it per recipe.

"'Yes, sir,' he went on, having scrunched and moistened for himself also, and taken pay for both. 'Aunt Huldy was a ripper when she got to movin', and the trouble was she was movin' most o' the time. I've knowed Uncle Abel to roost in an apple tree on his clearin' all night, waitin' fer Aunt Huldy to quiet down, an' I've heerd him say, more'n wunst, that it was a good thing he'd been kicked in the head by a mule wunst and got over it, or he'd be afeared o' the consequences if Aunt Huldy got to movin'.

"'Aunt Huldy she was tremendous sot ag'in Uncle Abel goin' fishin', an' Uncle Abel he'd ruther go fishin' than to the circus. Last week he couldn't hold out no longer, and he went over to Ben Runnels' pond to troll for picker'l. The fact is, though, that the pond ain't Ben Runnels, 'cause there ain't no setch person as Ben Runnels, nor hain't ben this twenty year an' better, an' when there was a Ben Runnels he didn't own the pond. The last day there ever was a Ben Runnels he went fishin' on that pond. If the fishin' hadn't ben so uncommon good that day Ben mowt be with us yit. Ben had half a pint o' fish worms with him in an old tomattus can, an' half a gallon o' worm o' the still in a jug. This was for exhilaratin' purposes. Ben alluz exhilarated arter ketchin' a fish, but the fish bit so fast that day that they kep' Ben busier than usual exhilaratin', so that when folks went to see wnat was the reason Ben didn't git home that day, an' found the boat upsot an' Ben an' the jug floatin' in the pond, there was less than two little jiggers of exhilaration left in the jug, but there was more than five gallen o' water in Ben. It wasn't drowndin' that killed Ben, some folks thought. They said it was the sudden washin' of all the exhilaration outen him by so much water gittin' inter him that done it, Ben not bein' used to setch overpowerin' disapp'intment. An' that's the way Ben got the title to that pond, an' it's ben called Ben Runnels' pond ever sence.

"'Well, there's where Uncle Abel went fishin', spite o' Aunt Huldy's warnin s, an' when he got back I don't s'pose that Aunt Huldy ever moved so rippin' in her life. All that Uncle Abel has ever said about it is that she jest swatted him over, an' then sot on him till she peeled what Uncle Abel says jest a ben more'n a bushel o' taters. Aunt Huldy weighed in the vicinity o' 200 pound, an' every time Uncle Abel wiggled she'd scrunch down on him. An' speakin' o' scrunchin', there's a lot more tanzy; shell I——'

"I interrupted the landlord to say that I didn't care for any more, and he seemed so much disappointed and remained silent so long that I began to think that I wasn't going to hear the end of his story, but by and by he started in again.

"'Yes, sir, she scrunched down on him hard, Aunt Huldy did. She scrunched down so fur arter awhile that Uncle Abel says he got his eyes on the shinin' shore, an' was hopin' that Aunt Huldy would give him another twist so's he could get his feet on it; but she wan't through with him yit, an' didn't let him pass over. There's where Aunt Huldy made her mistake. She ought to scrunched Uncle Abel all the way over, an' then she could a took out that black bombazine ag'in an' hooked it on fer her fourth, an' ben a-lookin' out fer her fifth now. But she didn't do it, an' there's where she made her mistake.

"'This here last lively movin' of Aunt Huldy's must a kind o' sot Uncle Abel to thinkin'. Joe Bevan, up yonder apiece, had an ol' churnin' ram that somehow or other was dead sot agin women folks, an' none of 'em cared to go nigh him, 'cause he'd pitch at 'em, an' Joe kep' the ugly ol' chap tied up. But the ram was mild enough to men folks. T'other day Aunt Huldy says that it beat all how it was that she couldn't have a piece o' rope to make a pull-to for the gate, and that if she had a man worth a pinch o' salt that she'd a had the rope long 'fore that. This was the fust that Uncle Abel knowed that Aunt Huldy wanted a piece o' rope, an' that very day he was goin' by Joe Bevan's place, an' he see a piece o' rope at the side o' the road. He picked it up and went home with it. Wrappin' it round a post, he went in the house.

"'"Hully," says he, "I've brung home a piece o' rope."

"'"You have, hay?" Aunt Huldy snapped out. "It's a good thing, an' it'll come in handy fer you to hang yourself with!"

"'So Aunt Huldy goes to see the rope.

"'"Ding your pictur!" she hollers back to Uncle Abel. "An' you've got that rantankerous ram o' Joe Bevan's tied to the end of it, too!"

"'"Why, so he is!" says Uncle Abel.

"'Aunt Huldy grabbed the ax and moved on the ram. The ram seen Aunt Huldy comin', an' went to meet her. He met her so suddint that she curled up like a ship-knee, kicked a little, an' never got up from where she landed. Uncle Abel says that Aunt Huldy passed away a good deal peacefuller than he thought it was in her natur' to, an' he's a lone, lorn widderer, an' has the bombazine dress to sell. I wish he'd a staid here awhile. Then I'd a had some one to jine me in a scrunch. If you don't keer to jine, you mowt leave one for Uncle Abel.'

"I paid for a 'scrunch' for Uncle Abel to enjoy when he came in, and drove on my way, and who should I meet but Uncle Abel again.

"'Hullo!' he shouted, and I stopped.

"'He told ye 'bout me an' Aunt Huldy, an' the rantankerous ram, o' course?' said Uncle Abel, grinning.

"'Yes,' I said.

"'He's been licked like tarnation three times in less'n a year fer tellin' that,' said Uncle Abel, 'but seems like he can't help it. He didn't mean no harm by it. He'll tell it to you ag'in if you come along this way to-morrow. I wa'n't never married in my life, an' there ain't no Aunt Huldy, nor no ram, nor never was!'

"I couldn't help but grin with Uncle Abel, and said:

"'Well' I paid for a rum and tansy up there for you, anyhow.'

"'Course you did!' said Uncle Abel. 'That's part of it. I hain't took a drink in more'n forty year! Think you'll go back an' lick him? He'll sort o' 'spect it.'

"But I said I'd let it go, and drove on, leaving Uncle Abel in the road grinning after me."—New York Sun.

Increased His Class.

This could only happen in Scotland, where a way has been discovered by a Glasgow minister to compel even the worldly passions of men to make for righteousness. He noticed that the young women who came to Bible class at his house each had a young man waiting for her. So one evening what did this canny Scotsman do, when the class was in progress, but make an excuse to leave the room and step outside, where, as he expected, he found a small crowd of waiting swains. With much politeness he pointed out his unwillingness to keep them from their sweethearts and invited them to come inside and see them.

It is needless to add this Glasgow minister has a mixed Bible class now on his hands. And it is doing well.—Boston Herald.

LOTS OF MOUNTAINS TO CLIMB.

Many Peaks So Rugged that No One Has Yet Dared to Climb Them.

The terrible Jungfrau of Switzerland is but 14,000 feet high, yet travelers from all over the world journey to Interlaken to climb it or say they have sat in the hotel and wished that they might climb it. Mont Blanc, in the same delightful little European republic, is forever quilted with snow, and for this reason is one of the most seductive features of travel to the neighborhood of Geneva. The Chor health resort, on the east side of the Swiss republic, is visited by thousands of invalids because it is one of the loftiest and noblest of European sanitariums.

Then why should not every American who has money to spare and the desire to make a journey out into Colorado, strap a pair of mountain boots on his legs, put a spike on an ash staff and attempt to climb Mount Blanca, in the southern part of this state. Mount Blanca is over 14,400 feet high. Or if he does not desire to take the risks of this perilous ascent why should not he come up into the northern part of this state, place his field glasses in his hands and gaze on the glacier and the perpetual banks of snow that cover Mt. Hallett? Or if tourists be possessed of reverence and piety, why may they not locate in Central Colorado and fix their eyes upon the great white cross that indents the Mount of the Holy Cross at an elevation of 14,176 feet?

If it is the duplicate of Chor that tourists seek, Manitou, in this State, rests at the foot of 14,000-foot Pike's Peak for them, and is itself 6,300 feet above the sea, while being endowed with health-giving waters the equal of Carlsbad.

There are 110 mountains in Colorado whose peaks are over 1,200 feet above the ocean level. Forty of these are higher than 14,000 feet and more than half that number are so remote and rugged that no one has yet dared to attempt to climb them. They are as unique as those of Switzerland and as fearful as the Alps in the warning they offer to men and women who are so hardy as to defy them by starting upon their ascent. Some of them are massed with snow, others have glaciers over their approaches, and others are merely masses of jagged rocks.

Not even Coloradoans have sought as yet to surmount them, and the profession of "guide" is still open to whoever may care to enter it. Railroads reach within close enough range to provide hotel facilities, but otherwise the mountain climbing of Colorado is yet awaiting its pioneers. Did the Coloradoans or people of other States fully realize the intoxication as well as the health-giving powers of mountain climbing, Rocky Mountain climbing would be one of the most popular recreations of America.

Only one mountain climbing club is known to exist in Colorado. There is room for a dozen more. There should be one in every city. By the evidences such clubs might offer of their thrilling experiences and of their unexampled pastimes, the fame of the Rockies as a place of pleasure and adventure might be widely advertised, and Colorado thus be pushed forward to the place it must eventually occupy as the American substitute for Switzerland.—Denver Times.

World's Largest Fruit Farms.

The largest fruit farm in the world is in Jamaica. The largest fruit plantations in that island are owned and operated by an American company, the area of whose fruit farm is 44,000 acres. They own 28,000 acres, and the other 16,000 acres are held by them under lease. Their principal crops are bananas and cocoa nuts, and last year they shipped three million bunches of bananas and five million cocoa nuts, besides other fruits, to America and elsewhere, employing twelve steamers belonging to the company. Near Olden, on the Ozark Mountains, in southern Missouri, there is one of the largest and finest fruit farms in the world. It consists of 2,200 acres of land, owned by a syndicate formed of members of the Missouri Horticultural Society, and on which are planted 61,000 peach, 23,000 apples and 2,000 pear trees, with forty acres in small fruits. There is an orchard at Barbara, in California, belonging to Edward Cooper, which has an area of 1,700 acres, and contains 10,000 olive trees, 3,000 English walnut trees, 4,500 Japanese persimmon trees, 10,000 almond trees, and about 4,000 nut and other various fruit trees. At Toddington, near Winchcombe, in Gloucestershire, Lord Sudeley has an orchard of 500 acres in extent, which yields its owner an annual profit of £10,000. In Jersey and Guernsey are many fine orchards; one in the former island being said to contain 60,000 pear trees.

A Noted Bridge for Suicides.

The most noted bridge in the world for suicides is said to be that spanning an abyss in the park of the Buttes-Chaumont at Paris, which, owing to its reputation in this respect, has got the title of the "Accursed Bridge." From the day the bridge was finished up to the present time there has been no diminution in the numbers of those who in the course of each year cast themselves from its parapets. For nearly a score of years from 100 to 150 people have annually committed suiside in this way. The rocks that pierce the shallow waters at the bottom of the gorge are sharp, and the coveted death is certain, once they are over. A sort of terrible fascination seems to hang about the bridge, or about one particular spot about half way across it—a fascination which is said to affect, more or less, nearly every one who pauses there and looks downward. Four of the watchmen, stationed there to prevent would-be suicides, have themselves yielded to the fatal fascination of this suicides' bridge.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Abuse.—Calling hard names is not statesmanship. Abusive epithets are not argument.—Rev. W. T. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Incomplete.—A man who is unconverted is in a sense incomplete. Until he comes to Christ he has not come to himself.—Rev. H. R. Schenck, Presbyterian, Chambersburg, Pa.

The Day of Rest.—The welfare of both church and state is dependent upon a proper regard for the Sabbath as a day of rest.—Rev. Henry Tesnow, Reformed Episcopalian, Denver, Colo.

Belief and Faith.—The man who can find out what he believes and is willing to follow whither it leads will surely come to a victory that will conquer the greatest impossibilities.—Rev. Geo. Cooper, Baptist, Richmond, Va.

Vitality of the Bible.—The vitality of the Bible, as seen in the living agencies employed in printing and circulating its sacred pages, gives us an important argument in support of it.—Rev. Dr. Lee, Presbyterian, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Orthodoxy.—The stronghold of the Salvation Army is its orthodoxy. We insist upon an acceptation of the word of God in every particular, without abridgment or trimming or emasculation. No religious work can be lasting if conducted upon other lines.—Maj. Marshall, Salvationist, Chicago, Ill.

Great Men.—It is said great men are solitary—as is a great mountain. But it was not so with Jesus. His greatness was so divine that he could live among the lowly people as their very brother.—Rev. C. L. Thompson, Presbyterian, New York City.

The Bible.—If there be no other proof for the divine origin of the Bible, its perennial youth, its perpetual use and usefulness, speak sufficiently of its superiority over all human wisdom; it is the book for all times and for all men.—Rev. Dr. Schneeberger, Hebrew, Baltimore, Md.

Advance of Liberalism.—Liberalism in church affairs is to-day as strong as a rock. It is not an experiment, and will not be cast aside. So far from detecting signs of decadence, I can state that, on the contrary, there are signs of growth and advancement.—Rev. Dr. Thomas, Independent, Chicago, Ill.

The Unseen Life.—Let the ashes of some volcano catch with kinetoscope accuracy the unseen life of London, New York or San Francisco, and Pompeii would be no longer regarded as peculiar in its vice or isolated as an example of social corruption.—Rev. William Rader, Congregationalist, San Francisco, Cal.

The Bondage of Evil.—Thousands of men all about us are bound hand and foot by the cords of their sins and are helpless victims to the temptations about them. All their strength of will and power of determination cannot free them from the bondage of their sinful natures and evil habits. There is only one power that can free from sin, and that is the power of Jesus Christ, who died to redeem the world from sin.—Rev. P. C. Curwick, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Discipline—No man can suffer except through a violation of law. The Father is not interested in our suffering only as he can help us out of it. We do not desire furnace experiences, but it is a discipline that we must have. God designs that our lives sha be woven into other lives. We need each other. When God has not withheld his son, how shall he not freely give us all things? We shall never reach our highest unless we go as God designs.—Rev. Dr. Roughton, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Freedom.—Freedom is not ours yet, and when we obtain it we must remember that it is not an end of itself, and that a man is not necessarily good because he is free. Freedom is an opportunity. We use freedom to discover the truth, and men need the truth about body, mind and soul. A man who holds wrong ideas of God dishonors him. The truth-seeker is the God-seeker, and the only God-seeker, and for the sake of truth, God and men need to be free.—Rev. M. J. Savage, Unitarian, New York City.

Where Maidens Wish.

"The wishing tree still has its friends," said one of the watchmen in Lafayette park, as he pointed out the large chestnut tree now loaded down with burrs, to the west of the statue of Jackson, "and scarcely a day passes that some one does not speak to me about it, or tell me about their success or want of it in their wishes.

"Whether the tree gets all the wishes that are asked for or not, it furnishes the wishers with a great deal of fun, and it does not seem to do the tree any harm. One of the nurse girls who visits the park every day with her charges told me yesterday that she wished for a husband and wished real hard. She did not get a husband yet, though there is no telling how soon she will come out, but she did the next thing to it, by finding a pretty wedding ring on one of the walks ten minutes after she had made her wish.

"I don't know that any one or any park has a tree that can do better than that all inside of ten minutes. But nurse girls are not the only ones who go to the tree with their wishes, I assure you."—Washington Evening Star.

Onomatopœia.

A wag who, for a consideration, helped the Cincinnati police court to distinguish between the innocent and the guilty, got off a good thing.

His honor asked an officer who the prisoner was.

"A Russian, your honor."

"His name?"

"I can't pronounce it, your honor."

"Spell it, then."

"V-e-z-o-z-i-z-a-z-e-z-s-h-s-h-z-z-i."

"What is he charged with?"

Then Carl Nippert, the wag, jumped up and said, "Soda water, your honor, I should say, by his name."

When a 150-pound man takes a 200-pound girl out riding on a tandem every evening—that is love.

Time flies. That's one advantage it has over flying machines.

MRS. PINKHAM'S VICTORY

Mrs. Sidney Hamlet.

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

RED HOUSE, VA.—To Mrs. Pinkham: "My heart goes out in sympathy to all who are suffering with troubles peculiar to the female sex.

"I would like to express my gratitude for what your Vegetable Compound has done for me. I have been a sufferer since girlhood; did not then know the cause of dreadful sick headaches and other troubles. I could not take long walks, lift or carry anything heavy, and was very nervous.

"Last summer I was almost an invalid; could not walk across my room without pain. I sent for our physician. He pronounced my case a bad one of 'Prolapsus Uteri,' congestion and ulceration of the womb, and said I was to lie abed. I was so distressed to find myself so helpless and useless to my family; I saw your Compound advertised and thought I would try it. I took several bottles, and used the Sanative Wash and Pills as directed, and now I am as strong as I ever was, and do all my own housework. I can walk more than a mile without any inconvenience. Oh! I am truly grateful. I cannot write the good you have done me. Words are inadequate to express it. May God bless you for the good you are doing."—MRS. SIDNEY HAMLET, Red House, Va.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

The Tufted Titmouse.

His coat is like a wintry sky
When once the sun has set
And in the west a single line
Of red is smouldering yet.
Above his black, courageous eye
He wears his soldier's crest;
No bitter, rude, nor screaming wind
Can daunt his martial breast.

I met him in a leafy dell—
A brook ran sweet and clear.
As if he called from paradise,
He shouted, "Here, here!"
In busy thought the moments fled
I pondered, "Then so near?"
Far o'er a hill his voice replied,
"'Tis here, here, here!"

In winter's frost we met again,
When every leaf was sear.
"Where is your heavenly country now?"
He answered, "Here, here!"
—St. Nicholas.

The Fat Old Man.

Can you make a fat old man like the picture without taking the pencil from the paper? Study the picture carefully and you will see how it is done. Begin with the eye and trace the lines with a pin, then try to see if you can draw the picture. After you "learn it by heart," so you can draw it from memory, you can surprise your companions.

Dear Victoria.

"No, I am not going, but I have made up my mind to let my dear Victoria go, as she may never have another chance to see the world."

The little mother sat rocking "dear Victoria" gently, and kissed her at intervals in the sweetest and most loving way.

Elsie Cummings was the mother of Victoria, and she was telling her little friend and playmate all about the really, truly splendid trip her dollie was going to have. For Aunt Ellen had promised to stow Victoria away in her steamer trunk and take her abroad with her—that the poor thing's mind might be improved.

Elsie's mamma could not spare her little daughter, and as a balm to her feelings aunty had proposed that Victoria go, never dreaming that the dear child would take the offer in earnest. But this was an opportunity not to be overlooked. A traveling suit was made, and she was just about ready for the steamer—trunk.

Nannie Gray looked wistful as she clasped her own sweet doll child closer to her bosom, as though there was danger of her child starting along with the favored Victoria.

"I don't see how you can bear to let her go, Elsie? Just think how lonely you will be, and I am sure my little Minnette will miss her, and so shall I, and p'r'aps she will forget you when she gets so far away."

"Oh, no, she won't, will you, dear, forget your mamma? No, she is not that kind of child, Nannie. And just think what good long talks we will have together on her return in the spring. Then auntie will p'rhaps get her something new and stylish, and I will be good and let you take the patterns."

"Oh, Elsie, that will be so nice, and I will let Minnette come and spend the day with you sometimes while your Victoria is away. And Minnette is really very good company, I find."

"Yes, auntie; she's ready, but please may I put her in myself. Good-by, my own dear; be good, and try to improve your mind, and don't forget to write to me whenever Aunt Ellen does. No, thank you, Nannie, not to-day. Minnette is very nice, but I think I will not try to play any more to-day. Some way I feel dreadfully upset. If it were not for the advantages I think she will have, I could not bear it. You see, she has been with me so long, and this is the first time we have ever been parted."

And the little mother kissed her friend with tears in her eyes, and doubtless felt much as older mothers have done when their dear child first started out to see the world.

Let us hope that Victoria will realize all her advantages and return to her home and mother so much improved that little Mamma Elsie will feel repaid for her unselfishness in allowing her to go abroad.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Sam's Diary.

Samuel Walter Nickles, a bright lad, commenced to keep a diary last January. Toward midsummer Sam got tired and quit, but his diary was preserved by an elder brother, who furnished these extracts:

Jan. 1—Went down to Joe's office to get my sled. (Joe is his brother, as will be seen by other extracts.)

Jan. 4—Helped Martha untrim the Christmas tree.

Jan. 6—Went to see Hilda, and we sang a few songs. (Hilda, it may be said, is his girl.)

Jan. 10—Wore a new pair of pants which I had never seen before.

Jan. 13—Hilda came over, and we did our lessons together.

Jan. 14—Went to see Hilda, and we played valentine.

Jan. 16—Had donots for dinner, which I like very much.

Jan. 30—I got the mumps, and hurt me pretty much.

Jan. 31—Got 'em yet and were examined in German and I couldn't come.

Feb. 5—My momps are over and I went to school.

Feb. 6—Martha's birthday and she got a pin with a diamond in it an' other things.

Feb. 12—I didn't go to see Hilda and she didn't come to see me.

Feb. 14—I got 3 valentines and sended 8.

Feb. 28—A teacher died in my school to-day.

March 3—We had no school on account, and she will be buried to-day.

Monday, March 9—Now it seems as if I had to go to school all last week.

Tuesday—I wish we wouldn't have school to-day.

Thursday—I will be glad when Saturday comes.

Saturday—I like it when Saturday comes.

April 1—I fooled Joe to-day. I told him there was a moth in the air, and he looked up.

Friday—I am glad this is the last day of school this week.

Saturday—Now I can have some fun.

April 8—We had mental to-day, and I got 80. A boy I go with accidentally got 30.

Saturday—On Saturday I always want to sleep so long.

Sunday—Nobody was in our class but me.

Monday—If it would only be Saturday I wish it would.

Tuesday—Now it's only Tuesday yet.

Saturday—I played a little with my show of Buffalo Bill.

Sunday—My new teacher came and three other boys.

May 19—Last night I fell out of bed and cried in my sleep. I hurt my toe pretty bad.

May 20—My toe ain't better yet.

May 22—My toe ain't quite better yet.

Sunday—I went to Sunday school, and there were two boys, counting me. Well, if to-morrow ain't school again.

June 17—To-day is the last day of school. Hurrah. My average is above 94.

June 26—To-morrow I will bathe.

On Saturday, July 11, Sam closed his diary for the year with the entry: "I went barefoot to-day."

Better Than the Best.

"Home life cements the love of husband and wife; other modes of living often loosen the tie," writes Edward W. Bok, in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Nor does the question of expense excuse the not having of one's own home. A home is not, of necessity, a palace. The humblest cottage is a million times better than the most luxurious hotel ever planned by the hands of man. In the one happiness is probable; in the other it is just possible. We can talk all we choose about married happiness; that it, after all, rests solely between two people, and that it makes no difference where they live. That is very good as a theory. But thousands of instances prove the contrary; that the theory will not work out in practice. Happiness depends upon the growth of the people who are parts of it. People who stop and stagnate are never happy. True happiness thrives on what it feeds upon. Let stagnation enter into two lives, and happiness becomes stagnant and unhealthy. But let our lives be filled with contentment, with domestic pleasure, with that germ of evolution which springs from the hearthstone, and the happiness which springs from those elements is purer, sweeter and more satisfying to our natures, our minds and our souls. A man and wife were made to abide together in inseparable lives, and as new elements come into that union to sweeten and hallow it, the abiding place should be some little place, some corner in this big world which they can call their own, their very own, where everything around them speaks of the husband's energy and the wife's achievements. That is home."

Origin of Popular Games.

It is quite astonishing how many games were originally invented and are to-day practiced by people we are accustomed to think of as savages. The Canadian game of lacrosse originated among the North American Indians. Wallace tells us how in Borneo one wet day he thought to amuse his Dyak boys by showing them cat's cradle, but he found that they not only knew it, but knew more intricate figures than he. The Maoris of New Zealand actually have a sort of pictorial history in cat's cradle figures of twisted fiber. The Sandwich Islanders play a kind of draughts. The South Sea peoples nearly all are adepts at kite flying. Polo comes from Persia and is played magnificently by wild hill tribes from Northern India.

Two Unique Prayers.

Bishop Leslie, "the fighting bishop," before a battle in Ireland, prayed, says the London Sketch, as follows: "Oh, God, for our unworthiness we are not fit to claim thy help; but if we are bad, our enemies are worse, and if thou seest not meet to help us we pray thee help them not, but stand thou neuter this day and leave it to the arm of flesh." The United Service Magazine compares with this the supplication which an officer offered before one of the battles for Hungarian independence in 1849: "I will not ask thee, Lord, to help us, and I know thou wilt not help the Austrians; but if thou wilt sit on yonder hill thou shalt not be ashamed of thy children."

Trying to Be Perfect.

"No man," said Uncle Eben, "kin be puffect. But it's only by tryin' ter be so dat most ob us kin manage ter keep middlin' respectable."—Washington Star.

People who are too fresh are apt to get in a pickle.

HOMEOPATHIC HOSPITAL FOR SAN FRANCISCO.

The homeopathic hospital which the citizens of San Francisco are to build is designed to be one of the finest institutions of its kind on the continent of North America. The University of California having refused to include the homeopaths in the allied college, the homeopaths and their friends set to work to get even, and the result will be a magnificent medical and surgical hotel, which, it is hoped by the new school of treatment, will make the "regulars" green with envy. The institution has already been endowed by Mrs. Phoebe Hearst with a ward for children, and some of the most prominent citizens in California are deeply interested in the enterprise.

COUNT'S WICKED SCHEME.

Would Unite Europe in a Commercial War on America.

Count Agenor Goluchowski, the Austrian Minister of Foreign Affairs who desires to unite Europe in a commercial war on the countries of America, has the reputation among European diplomats and statesmen of being a peaceful man. His speech, in which he almost violently advocated a concert of Europe for industrial warfare on the United States and the South American republics, would be startling were there any possibility of the Count's plan being put into practice. The Count is a man in the prime of life. He comes from a family which has been powerful in Austrian affairs for several generations, and he holds one of the three ministerial places within the gift of his country. His only associates of equal power and rank are the ministers of war and finance. He has been regarded as one of the most brilliant diplomats in all the countries immediately concerned in the troubles over the Balkan States. It was his calm, decisive action in the last engagement between Turkey and Greece that kept the small provinces in a state of peace. His word is law on diplomatic matters covering the uncertain territory between his own country and the Bosporus, he having served for years as head of the diplomatic corps at Bucharest, the capital of Roumania. It is to him that the nations have looked for a quiet adjustment of the Eastern problems. His utterances against the crushing competition of the transatlantic nations is looked upon with amazement. He claims all the countries of Europe must stand shoulder to shoulder against the encroachments made by the world across the ocean. His remarks are the more serious, when it is remembered that it is suspected that he made them with the full consent of the other powers which are trying to hold their own against the commercial activity of the Western world. The Austrian authorities declare that the Count's warning was more a desire than an expression of a program.

The Bicycle Woman.

A cycling magazine broaches the burning question: "Do men like women who cycle?" The magazine declares it to be a question that is agitating both sexes much of late, and it makes bold to answer: "It all depends." There are many sorts of wheelwomen—too many sorts, unluckily. There is the mannish, inartistically garbed individual in such frequent evidence, who boasts of being among the first women who ever rode the bicycle, and whose conversation is all of "century runs," and the "records," and "scorching." Then there is the silly, weak-minded little specimen of femininity who only rides because her friends do, and because it is the fashion. Wheelwomen of these two sorts, it is pretty safe to say, are not admired by men, and what is an even sounder test, neither are they by women. Did a girl but know it, there is, after all, no surer test of character than the way she rides her wheel. Not only the way she rides it, but the way she regards it, the position to which she relegates it among her other interests and activities. Bicycling brings to the surface all sorts of undreamed of possibilities in one's nature. It is a splendid gauge of personality. Not fast or hard rules can be laid down concerning it, of course; but this much may be said, at least: The girl who behaves well, dresses well, and rides well because she enjoys the pastime, and because she is in need of suitable outdoor exercise may be sure of calling forth respect and admiration wherever she goes.

WOMAN'S EXPRESSION.

The Peculiar Story It Tells to Those Who Take Time to Observe It.

The faces of women one passes in the street form a curious story, says the Family Doctor. One woman purses up her lips, another screws her eyes into unnaturalness, while a third will wrinkle up her forehead and eyebrows until she looks absolutely ugly. The trick is an unconscious one, but is none the less a trick, and a bad one.

There is no reason why any woman should look forbidding and bad-tempered just because she is annoyed about something. Deep-seated trouble has a way of writing itself upon the face whether we will or not. Sickness, too, has its handwriting, and will not be concealed by art. But the frown caused by superficial trouble should not be entertained by the face for an instant.

We should strive to look as pleasant as possible for the sake of others; a corresponding cheerfulness of temperament will inevitably result, and always to the sweetening of our nature.

We cannot afford to go about with gloomy faces. To depress others is not for us; our work is to cheer, to raise up, to comfort, but we shall never do this unless we cultivate a pleasant demeanor, and the cheerful temper inseparable from it. This brings us to that question of worry.

Can we put it more strongly than to say that it is a duty to put care, worry, fretfulness behind one? The habit must be learned, or we shall not "grow straight in the strength of our spirit, and live out our life as the light," as Swinburne so well puts it. "It is difficult to do that," says someone.

We all know that it is very hard, but women are not afraid of difficulties. The more difficult the right thing is to do, the greater reason for doing it. All we need is to make the first effort—strength will be born which will increase at each subsequent attempt, and we shall conquer it in the end. Salvation for women lies in this—not to be overcome by troubles, but to overcome them.

Information for Patrons.

When patrons of a small laundry in the upper part of the city failed to get their wearing apparel Saturday evening they found the place closed and this note pinned upon the door:

"Closed on account of sickness till Monday. I'm not expected to live."—Utica Observer.

Real Aristocratic Touch.

"George met a duke while he was abroad."

"A real duke?"

"He must have been. George loaned him $7."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

There is no parting so bitter as the parting of a quinine capsule just as you are in the act of swallowing it.

CHASING THE FEATHER.

"Chasing the Feather" is one of the merriest of healthful parlor games. A large sheet or tablecloth is held by the participants, who sit on chairs, placed in a circle. A small feather from a sofa cushion is laid upon it. The one who is to catch it must do so standing. To blow, blow, blow just as hard and fast and furious as possible is the bounden duty of every player. The one in whose vicinity the feather is caught is elected to do the "chasing."

FERDINAND OF BULGARIA.

A Petty Sovereign Who Is Continually Making Himself Ridiculous.

According to the Munchner Neuste Nachrichten, "Ferdinand of Bulgaria might well be designated the most absurd figure among the European princes were it not for the bloody deeds that occur about him lend him a sinisterly grotesque atmosphere. Neither the greatest statesman nor the humblest cafe-chatant singer is safe from the company with which he surrounds himself. From the legal proceedings which have recently occurred may be learned much of what not yet made public by the European press goes on around this extraordinary member of the house of Coburg."

The Vienna Zeit, too, asks who are actually the most intimate counsellors of the prince? "One must not go back too for," says that newspaper, "or one may chance upon banditti. Leaving the ashes of the fathers to rest in peace, and dealing only with the men who form the entourage of the prince, one would until recently have found at their head a French nobleman, a Count de Forras, who was learned in heraldry and as proud as a Spanish hidalgo, but did not speak one word of Bulgarian. His office was to look after the splendor of the court. He was a devout Catholic and went to mass regularly. But now he is gone, and in his place there is a jovial young French count—such a one as may be met with by the dozen in the salons of the Parisian haut and demimonde. He is a good fellow, speaks French prettily, is a distinguished cavalier, a clever actor—in short, an admirable Crichton. Before the marriage of the prince there acted as a sort of upper housekeeper a certain Countess Grenaud, who, later, married a favorite of the prince, Dr. Stautschoff by name, who is at present diplomatic agent in St. Petersburg, and whose absolute insignificance the Bulgarians had plenty of opportunity to discover. Dr. Leverkuhn, head of the library and of the zoological gardens, is certainly an honest man, but he has nothing to do with politics. Very different elements play a part in the politics of the country; notably those which have come to light during the Szimon affair, and also such persons as Poitscheff and Novelitsch, or the postoffice assistant Slatareff, whom the prince has raised to the dignity of his table companion, and Avradalijeff, who is at the head of the princely secret police.

"These are the grandees of the new Bulgarian court. They sit in the gala coaches which on state occasions follow the prince, when they are dressed in uniforms covered with gold lace, with footmen in knee breeches, lace jabots, wigs, with queues, etc., while the horses are caparisoned with glittering silver harness and nodding plumes on their heads; and in silk and satin upholstered coaches the courtiers follow, dressed in gala costumes, like the others, the whole a train such as the duodecimo nation is not worthy of; in short, a caricature, in the peasant country of Bulgaria, of princely rococo days.

"There were at one time robes of state, designed by the prince, which were well fitted to such processions. They had a train several yards long, which, in default of pages, was wont to be carried by two pupils of the war academy. But the prince wore this opera-bouffe mantle only once. The amusement which it everywhere awakened induced Stambuloff to tell him the truth, and the prince never again wore it.

"Ferdinand has introduced into democratic Bulgaria the kiss of reverence. From the highest official to the lowest peasant every Bulgarian, male or female, is obliged, when he approaches the prince, to kiss his hand. This spectacle may be seen at every parade, in theaters, balls, at court entertainments, in short, wherever the prince shows himself in public. The highest dignitaries in the land stand about in groups, and the prince goes from one to the other, holding out his carefully gloved hand to be kissed—truly an edifying picture of the manners of the time of Louis XV., leavened with Muscovite Caesar-opapism. Fear of the prince is only modified by the sense of his absurdity, which has penetrated the most remote strata of the population."

Men Have the Larger Hearts.

"It is customary to assert that women are more apt to love than men, and that they love with greater passion," said the physician. "But, nevertheless, if the heart has anything to do with it, the greater love should be that of the man. For a woman's heart is not as big as that in the male breast. Men have larger hearts. The average heart of a man weighs from ten to twelve ounces, while the average heart of a woman weighs two ounces less. Nevertheless, in proportion to the whole weight of the body, the woman's heart is greater, for in the normal woman the heart weighs 1-149 as much as all the rest of her, while a man's heart is but 1-169 of his total weight."

Invention Interests King Leopold.

At the Brussels exposition a few days ago King Leopold of Belgium, wishing to examine more closely a certain American machine, left his suite and stepped into the booth where the machine was installed. He requested the man in charge to explain its mechanism to him. Not noticing the royal escort a few yards away, the attendant took his majesty for some high official. He explained in detail the working of his machine and dwelt upon its points of excellence.

Foreigners in London.

The population of London is now estimated to include 250,000 persons of Irish and 120,000 of Scotch parentage; 45,000 Asiatics, Africans and Americans; with some 60,000 Germans, 30,000 French, 15,000 Dutch, 12,000 Poles, 7,500 Italians and 5,000 Swiss.

Homemade Hinges.

One frequently needs a great number of small hinges in making chicken and other coops. The two sketches given herewith show homemade hinges that are better than leather and cheaper than the hardware dealer's steel butts. The one shown first is made of screw eyes, inserted with a round rod of wood or wire running through them. Screw eyes come in all sizes so that almost any strength of hinge can thus be made. The two eyes can be placed close together and wired with fine wire if desired. Occasionally a bit of hard wood and a few screws will make a very serviceable hinge, attached as shown in the second picture, which tells its own story. Have the wood stout enough so that the screws will not split it, and use round-headed screws for the pivot if possible.—New England Homestead.

SCREW EYE HINGE.

Apple Pomace as Feed.

There is considerable nutriment in pomace as it comes from the mill. Stock will eat it quite readily if fed before it begins to ferment. This, however, it does very soon if exposed to the air. Consequently it is best to place the pomace in air-tight barrels or hogsheads, so as to keep air from it, and cover the pomace with something that will hold down the carbonic acid gas and prevent its escape as it forms. This is really ensilaging it. The pomace itself has not nutritive value to make this worth while. Its chief value is its succulency, and it should be fed with grain, hay or meal, so as to give the proper proportion of nutrition. When put up in air-tight barrels and kept slightly below freezing temperature there will be no more fermentation in the pomace than there is in the silo, and it can be used till late in the winter.

Windbreak for the Driver.

Drivers in winter often suffer severely and unnecessarily from the cold winds. Returning home without a load the wind has a chance to blow upon them unhindered. Have two small stakes and four holders for them, as shown in the sketch. Provide a stout piece of duck and sew rings to it as suggested. A small glass with its wooden frame can be inserted, and two small openings made for the reins. If the wind is in front, at either side or at the driver's back, he has simply to change the stakes and his sheet of duck to escape its fury. When not in use the sheet can be folded, with the glass inside, and placed in the box used as a seat. Such a contrivance will save much suffering and can be had at a very slight cost.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Why Fattening Stock Eat Straw.

Domestic animals like variety in feed as much as does man himself. Possibly they are more partial to variety than are men and women, because the taste of animals is less vitiated. A fattening steer or sheep which is fed highly nitrogenous food will eat a good deal of bright grain straw, so as to supply the proper proportion of carbonaceous nutrition. When animals are fed corn, less straw will be eaten, as the corn is itself chiefly starch, which is only another form of carbon. For sheep that are fed beans and bean straw, the straw of wheat or oats will be eaten almost as readily as hay. It is needed to prevent the nitrogenous ration being too concentrates.

Ordering Nursery Stock.

To make sure that an order can be filled it should be sent in at as early a date as possible. It is best to order for spring delivery in the early winter. The order will be filled, and the rule in all nurseries is first come first served. In the North all nurserymen take up their out-of-door stock early, and hill it in so as to be able to fill orders from the South during the winter season. This is really much better than taking stock from nursery rows. When the trees are hilled in and properly protected from frost their roots will begin to start before winter is over, and they can be planted much more safely than stock recently dug.

Corn on One Acre.

How much corn will an acre of land produce? The Illinois State Board of Agriculture offered prizes for the largest crop on one acre, and twelve persons succeeded in raising over one hundred bushels each. The first prize was won by Mr. John Powers, with a yield of 166 bushels per acre, Mr. E. S. Fursman coming second with 160 bushels. The next ten persons produced, respectively, 150, 144, 143, 142, 116, 110, 108, 103, and two others 100 bushels each, the average of the twelve being 128½ bushels per acre The best fertilizer for corn was conceded to be a previous crop of clover, depending upon deep and early plowing, fine seed bed and shallow but thorough cultivation.

Experiments with Fertilizers.

The New York experiment station made some experiments in the use of fertilizers on potatoes, twenty-two plots being tested, on which fertilizer was applied at the rate of from 1,000 to 2,000 pounds per acre, two plots receiving 1,500 pounds per acre and one plot received no fertilizer at all. The 1,000-pound application increased the yield over the unfertilized plot 48.4 bushels per acre the first year and 39.6 bushels the next season. The 2,000-pound application increased the yield only 4.4 bushels over the 1,000 application of the first year and 14.1 bushels the next. The tests demonstrated that the use of over 1,000 pounds of fertilizer per acre would be at a loss.

Take the Cow on Trial.

When purchasing a cow always endeavor to take her on trial. No one can judge of the capacity or characteristics of a cow by appearances. Pure bred stock, however, is more uniform than scrubs. A cow may be a hard milker, a kicker and her milk may be deficient in solids or fat. No one sells a good cow unless compelled, and the purchaser takes risk in buying. Every cow brought on a farm should be known to the purchaser, as she may have disease or some other fault.

Protector for Shrubs.

A convenient method for protecting rose bushes and many small shrubs is shown herewith. All barrels that have lost both heads are saved and used for this purpose. Two small stakes are driven down, and a string attached, as shown in the sketch, to keep the wind from blowing them over. Straw is then put inside about the bush, making very warm and wind-tight winter quarters. A board, or a piece of burlap, can be tacked over the top to support the weight of the snow, if desired.

Cottonseed Meal for Fertilizer.

It is told in the New England Homestead that a New Hampshire farmer has proved beyond doubt that cottonseed meal is superior to phosphate as a fertilizer on light, warm soil. He uses less of the meal than of phosphate in a drill, and has raised from 200 to 300 bushels of potatoes to the acre and the heaviest crop of silo corn ever grown in his locality. Mixed with hen manure and ashes, the meal has proved excellent when seeding down.

A Hen's Egg Production.

About 150 eggs per year is estimated as the production of a hen, if the flock is small and well cared for, but with large flocks an average of 100 eggs per hen for one year is about correct, as disease, lice and mismanagement cause loss. The fowls on farms give larger profits in proportion to capital represented than larger stock, but are more neglected, and, therefore, do not give as large profits as could be derived from them.

Preparation for Winter.

Summer farming is but a preparation for winter. Food is cheaper in summer, but prices are lower. While the pasture is a valuable aid to the dairyman, it is sure to cheapen prices at times when grass is abundant, the market being regulated by the supply. The best dairymen grow crops for use on the farm in winter, preferring to feed their produce at the barn and convert it into milk and butter in winter, when higher prices rule.

Cement.

If you have a cement floor with breaks that must be mended, don't expect to get the new cement to adhere to the old without chipping out all loose parts of the old, cleaning it all out carefully and soaking it well with water. Then the new work will be good and stay good in connection with the old.

Potatoes to Be Higher.

The average per acre of potatoes for 1897 is less than seventy bushels, and prices will be much higher than for several years.

A KINDERGARTEN EXPERT.

The Lady Who Has Been Re-elected President of the National Association.

Miss Lucy Wheelock, the well known kindergartner of Boston, has been honored by a re-election to the position of president of the National Kindergarten association, which has been holding its annual session in St. Louis.

This distinction has been won by years of active service in the kindergarten field and is merited by the success which she has achieved.

Miss Wheelock, although born in Vermont, has been identified with educational interests in Boston ever since she graduated from the Chauncy Hall school, where her own education was acquired, and where, when a young girl, she gave evidences of possessing unusual literary ability.

Toward the close of her course she began to feel an interest in the teaching of little children by kindergarten methods. She took a course of instruction to prepare herself for this work and received her diploma from Miss Elizabeth Peabody.

A kindergarten had just been established in connection with Chauncy Hall school, and she was placed in charge, a position which she has held now for about 15 years, making herself most widely known of late years as a teacher of training classes, in which line she has few superiors.

Young girls who are preparing for kindergarten work come from all parts of the country to enjoy the privileges of her instruction.

When Chauncy Hall was consolidated with Berkeley Hall last year, arrangements were made whereby Miss Wheelock's connection with the school was to be kept up. A house was purchased at 284 Dartmouth street especially for the training school, and most of her work is done there.

In addition to her regular teaching, Miss Wheelock is well known as a lecturer and writer. She has contributed largely to educational journals and religious periodicals. She has also translated a number of stories for children from the German.

Her love for children led her to give considerable time and attention to Sunday school work, and she is well known among Sunday school workers both by her writings and lectures.

Miss Wheelock's philosophy of the kindergarten is: "It offers itself as the child's rightful kingdom, where he may be trained to look upon the 'plain, suffering face of nature' and to enjoy the good gifts of the Creator, which are presented to him in their type forms through the kindergarten gifts.

"The three hours spent in genuine child garden come as a timely salvation to the little one whose eyes are wearied and whose nerves are overstrained by the unmeaning toys and injudicious attention lavished upon him at home.

"In this garden of children he lives a simple, happy life of growth. He attains possession of himself and of his powers by constant doing and so learns to walk in the way of peace."—Boston Globe.

Solid Black Lace Lingerie.

Solid black lace lingerie is the very latest and most surprising of all conceptions in this line. Of course it comes from Paris, the place where all chic ideas originate, and it is really very dainty and pretty. A petticoat of the new fancy is quite a dream in black. The foundation is of some light, filmy black stuff, upon which are placed, one above the other, the tiniest ruffles of the most airy black lace, wrought in fairy designs. The entire skirt is literally as light as a feather.

Black satin corsets, embroidered in tiny dresden buds, are worn with the black underwear, of course, and the light, black undervests of raw and spun silk and the beautifully embroidered black silk stockings go to complete an extremely stylish and comfortable suit.

It is all quite expensive, but in Paris it is extremely popular and is now coming across the water. The spun silk "shapes" are as light and dainty as possible and can almost be put in a matchbox. What fad will next seize upon milady?—New York Tribune.

High Prices For Playing Cards.

A sale of old playing cards took place in London recently. The catalogue contained 46 lots, and though they lacked the extreme rarity of many in the Schrieber collection there were a number of unusually interesting and curious packs. These were the characteristics especially of 52 old proverb cards, the rarity of which is testified to by the fact that they are not mentioned in the British museum catalogue, in which every known variety is recorded. The pack was in fine condition and realized the sum of £4 1s. A marble backed set of 54 Dutch satirical cards, engraved in the first quarter of the eighteenth century, fetched £3 18s. The sum of £3 was paid for an antique geographical pack of about the year 1675. This set also included the rare explanatory card and another card describing other packs of the period. The "popish plot" pack, which was published in 1679, was sold for £2 18s. These cards are very scarce, but the completeness of the pack was broken by the absence of the seven of hearts, and this influenced the price. A pack illustrating the American war, with portraits of the generals engaged in it, realized 2 guineas.

Mrs. Randall Slack is visiting town.

Superintendent McDonald is working six men at the Defiance mine.

Jack Curran is working five men on his gold mine near the town of Panamint.

Mark Watterson came down from Bishop on Wednesday, returning yesterday.

Harry and Bob Lockett have gone to work on the old Sterling mine south of Darwin.

J. J. Gunn's mine at Minnietta continues to produce large quantities of high grade ore.

Weaver & Porter Bros. have fixed up the mill at Postoffice Springs to run on custom ore.

Julian Eibeshutz will arrive home this evening after a monht's vacation pleasantly spent at San Francisco.

Dr. Woodin was telegraphed yesterday to go to Lone Pine to attend Ben. Totten, who was hit in the eye with a piece of hot steel.

The judgments in the sheep cases have all been paid and satisfied except four, and these, it is expected, will be settled ina few days.

The Lane mine makes regular shipments of ore to the Selby Company. The smelting furnace at this mine is nearing completion.

The Reward mill has started up again after a period of enforced idleness caused by the long continued cold weather, which cut off the water supply.

Mrs. John E. Jones of Round Valley arrived at Independence on Wednesday and will spend a couple of weeks visiting with her relatives at Camp Independence.

The boys in town played a barberous joke on the tonsorial artist last night. The night was too bright, and although he held the sack until his candle went out the snipe failed to materialize.

An open installation of officers, banquet and ball will be given by Inyo Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M. to-morrow evening. A general invitation is extended to all to participate in the affair.

M. G. West, an expert in the employ of the Diebald Safe & Lock Co., has been in town for several days past putting a time lock on the safe in the County Treasurer's vault. The cost to the County is $350.

Supervisor Fitzgerald has men at work on the road in Shepard's canyon which was sadly in need of repairs. This road should be kept in good condition, as it is a direct route from the valley to the Panamint country.

R. W. Scott, Watchmaker and jeweler, will be at the Norman House, Independence for a short time, in a few days. Those wishing any work in his line will do well to leave orders with O. I. Mairs at the Norman house. All work warranted first class.

There is no reason why the farmers of this valley should not supply all the hay used in Panamint and Mountain Springs Districts, as they can find a ready sale there at thirty-five to forty-five dollars per ton. At the present time most of the hay comes from Mojave and South Fork.

The parties who purchased the mines in Jail and Tuber canyons are working twenty men, and in the deepest workings have from twelve to sixteen feet of good ore. The owners have purchased the Reilly mill, which is now situated south of Ballarat, and will soon move it to Jail or Tuber canyon.

Last week we published an account of a shooting affair at Darwin as given to us by Quigly McDermott, the wounded man. Since that publication we have learned that McDermott's statement is false. It appears that on the morning of January 27th, at the Larius saloon in Darwin, a Mexican named Carlos Valencia had a misunderstanding with a Mexican woman named Mrs. Warner, about money matters. She drew a revoleer and fired two shots at Valencia, both shots missing him and one striking McDermott. She gave McDermott money to come to Independence and have his wounds attended to. Valencia left Darwin for Mountain Springs and San Francisco. Mrs. Warner has been in Darwin but a short time, coming to that place from Bodie, in which latter place she is alled the "Ten Stamp Mill."

Death of Mrs. Gill.

One of the saddest events that has occurred in this community for many years was the death on Tuesday last of Mrs. H. D. Gill. She had been ill about three weeks, and despite the tenderest care and best medical assistance, she passed away. Besides a broken-hearted husband of whose life she was the light, she leaves a family of six children, the oldest of whom is eleven years and the youngest one year old. Her death was caused by acute atrophy of the liver. She was buried at the Independence cemetery on Wednesday and her remains were followed to the grave by nearly every person in the vicinity.

The Montgomery Bros. are working twenty-five men on their mines in Pleasant canyon, and have large bodies of good grade ore. With a mill at the mines, all the ore can be worked at a good profit, as the present expense of hauling, packing and sacking, amounting to about seven dollars per ton, would be saved.

L. F. J. Wrinkle went to Darwin last week to do some surveying in the Defiance mine.

Whether regarded as an industry, a pastime or a method of practicing law, lynching in Nevada is to continue for some time longer unhampered by legal interference and unfretted by public criticism. That is the only conclusion deducible from the refusal of the Douglas Grand Jury to indict the lynchers in the Uber case at Carson, for it seems there was no lack of evidence against the lynchers, but a most plentiful lack of desire to prosecute them.

It is most fortunate in every respect that along with the news of the refusal of the Grand Jury to indict there came an explanation of the cause of the refusal. Had nothing been made public but the bare report of the action of the jury, Eastern opinion would have at once declared the case to be another evidence of the wild and woolly lawlessness of the West; while in the West itself there would have been so many suggestions of "stuff" and "dough" and "Colonel Mazuma" that the uninitiated would have supposed the colonel keeps a bakery at Carson, and the Grand Jury had taken his cake.

The explanation which so opportunely came along with the news saves the West and the people of Nevada from all injurious suspicions either on this coast or beyond the Rockies. It makes known the fact that the lynchers were permitted to go free simply to save expense. It would cost the county a good deal of money to have prosecuted the guilty parties, and bonanza days being over in the sagebrush state, there is no longer any money to burn either in court or out of it. On that score the lynchers were released by the thrifty members of the Grand Jury, doubtless in the hope that having been thus given rope enough they would eventually hang themselves or one another without expense to the county.

Thrift is the mother of all virtues. It is pleasing to observe the cultivation of it among the people of Nevada, where it has long been neglected. When they have well learned how to save money they may proceed to higher lessons of economy and learn how to save lives and protect person as well as property. Then they will know that thrift walks hand in hand with law, and that money expended in the performance of justice is neither wasted nor lost.

In the meantime it is gratifying that the case when fully examined makes a considerably better showing for the people of Nevada than appears on the surface. An effort, really in earnest on the part of the officers of the law, was made to bring the lynchers to justice. The Prosecuting Attorney did his work with zeal and seems to have submitted to the jury abundant evidence to prove the case of the State against the accused. A considerable number of the Grand Jury also were ready and willing to act. Justice failed simply because a number of thrifty citizens whose devotion to economy would have made them excellent Supervisors were by a freak of fortune turned from office and landed in the Grand Jury.—Call.

The average newspaper man is a man of many trials and tribulations. A Kentucky editor said that silver buckles on garters are becoming fashionable, and he hoped to see more of them. His wife sued for divorce and the only woman in town who had silver buckles on her garters cowhided the poor editor until he was raw as a potato.

According to an Alaska paper, a gentleman who has just escaped from the Klondike region gives the following account of some things that happened there: "A man told me who had wintered up there seven years that it was so cold in January that they froze the flames of their candles and sold them for strawberries. He said they kept their fires over night by putting them out in the air and letting them freeze, and then thawed them out in the morning. He said he had seen four men die of colic from eating whisky that was frozen so hard it wouldn't thaw inside of them. He said the cows all gave ice cream till they froze to death. He said he knew a clerk in a hotel on the Yukon that got rich selling diamonds the diamonds being nothing on earth but ice crystals that didn't thaw till after the clerk had got out of the country. He said he had seen a man fall off the roof of a barn and freeze so stiff before he lit that he broke in two when he hit the ground. He said he had seen smoke freeze in a chimney till the fire wouldn't draw, and he knew of one case where the smoke froze after it gat a hundred feet up and fell back on the roof knocking a hole in the house big enough to drive a yoke of steers through. He said the reason that the nights were so long in that country was that the dark got frozen so that the daylight couldn't thaw its way through in less than six months.

The order of religious services will be as follows until further notice:

Independence—Preaching service every Sunday evening commencing 7 o'clock.

Lone Pine—Every Sunday morning (excepting the last Sunday of each month) commencing at 11 o'clock.

George's Creek's—The first and third Sunday of each month to commence at 2:30 o'clock.

Liberty—The last Sunday of each month to commence at 2 o'clock.

All are cordially invited to be present at these services.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

NEVER TOO SURE.

Against the probability or possibility of mischance or accident we can never be too sure. But if we should stop to consider how great is the chance of sudden death, we would be made too timid and unhappy. Caution is needed not to be foolhardy, and precaution to know what is best to do when an accident happens. One day this winter two men were walking, and one said: "We're too timid in treading on slippery places. I tread firmly and never think about them, and so escape a fall." "Never be too sure," said the other, "it is that that throws you off and makes the fall the harder." Just then they came upon a place covered with thin snow, where kids had been sliding. The first speaker slipped, and came down with his foot turned, and badly sprained his ankle. He was a cripple on crutches until a short time ago, having used many things without benefit. Up to that time he had not used St. Jacobs Oil, which, when used, cured him completely, so that he walks as usual. There is a probability that for the rest of the season he will walk cautiously, with the precaution of having this great remedy ready for use.

The Secretary of the Treasury has decided not take an appeal to the courts from the recent decison of the Board of General Appraisers in which it was held that calfskins, under the new tariff act, should not be classified as hides, but as skins. Under this ruling calfskins will be admitted free of duty.

THE LAST MAN ON EARTH

To recklessly experiment upon himself with hope of relief is the dyspeptic. Yet the nostrums for this malady are as the sands of the sea, and, presumably, about as efficacious. Indigestion, that obstinate malady, even if of long persistency, is eventually overcome with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, an appetizing tonic and alterative, which cures constipation, fever and ague, bilious remittent, rheumatism, kidney complaint and feebleness.

As far as calculations can decide, the temperature of comets is believed to be 2,000 times fiercer than that of red-hot iron.

In a milligram of bacteria there is a population five times as large as that of the earth, provided they are of pure culture. There are evidently other worlds than ours.

At a recent conference of engineers in London, the advantages of nickel-steel for ship building were urged, and the necessity was pointed out of finding new deposits of nickel and reducing the cost of its metallurgy.

Many Indian mounds have been discovered in Southern Indiana and have yielded valuable finds. Stone axes were formerly plentiful in the farming districts of that State, and were used for door props, but they have now almost disappeared. Arrow heads are the only relics that are even fairly plentiful.

Cinnamic acid, the alleged new cure for consumption, is a white, crystalline, odorless substance, formerly obtained from the fragrant resin storax and oil of cinnamon, but now made from benzine. Its German discoverer claims to have treated 400 cases with favorable results.

Veneer-cutting has reached such perfection that a single elephant's tusk thirty inches long is now cut in London into a sheet of ivory 150 inches long and 20 inches wide, and some sheets of rosewood and mahogany are only about a fiftieth of an inch thick.

Zootherapy consists in transferring a disease from man to some animal, and is the converse of the medical theory that animals convey disease to man. This system of curing ills was devised by Ferapi, a Florentine. He mentions the case of a man suffering from rheumatism who made his dog lie across his bed. The man recovered and the dog died.

Two new planets have been discovered between Mars and Jupiter by M. Charlois, an astronomer of Nice. M. Charlois probably holds the record for the number of planets he has discovered in his lifetime. His nearest rival is the Austrian astronomer, Herr Palisa, who has discovered eighty-three, but he falls short of M. Charlois' record by three.

Electricity can travel faster than 200,000 miles in a second, or, in other words, go around the world once, like messages recently dispatched from an American exhibition, it can make the journey eight times in one second. This would be at the rate of about 500 times in about one minute, or 10,000 times in twenty minutes.

The lightning specialist connected with the government weather bureau maintains that rods are no protection, and that most precautions taken by people to keep out of the path of a possible electrical discharge are useless. The recent wonderful discoveries in relation to the nature of electrical force prove the worthlessness of the lightning rod, but offer nothing toward disarming the thunderbolt.

Pulque, the Mexican drink, made from the juice of the Agave Americana, is recommended as an efficient prophylactic and remedy for scurvy. Dr. Peres, of the United States army, is recorded as the first to employ this beverage as an anti-scorbutic. Pulque is an unrectified, acid wine, produced by fermentation in aqua miel, the juice of the maguey, or Agave Americana. It is a yellowish white liquor, not easily preserved for a long time.

Many psychoneurologists advocate the medical treatment of psychically affected brains. M. de Fleury, in his new book, entitled "L'Introduction a la Medecine de l'Esprit," seriously combats the old theory that only bodily ills are the province of the practitioner, and contends that disorders of the psychic half of the human economy are as numerous and important as those affecting the somatic half. M. de Fleury believes that systematic efforts should be made to render them amenable to treatment.

FISH CULTURE.

Work Done in the United States During the Year 1896.

The annual report of Washington of John J. Brice, Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, states that 48,000,000 shad eggs were collected, and from these 93,000,000 fry were planted in streams emptying into the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico. The increase in shad eggs collected was 30,000,000 over the previous year, and if a bill now before Congress is enacted into a law auxiliary stations will be established on most of the important rivers of the Atlantic coast and will result in immense increase in the output of this species. The output of lobster fry was 97,000,000, against 72,000,000 for the previous year, and Commissioner Brice says there is little doubt that the output in another year will be increased more than 500 per cent.

While the attempt to keep up the constantly decreasing supply of mackerel along the New England coast was more or less experimental, 24,000,000 eggs were collected. Thirty-one million tautog clam eggs were collected in Buzzard's Bay, and 17,000,000 fry were liberated from them. Great increases in results at a large saving of expense were accomplished in salmon hatching on the Pacific coast. The total take of 37,000,000 salmon eggs amounted to three times as many as were ever collected before in the United States in any one season. It is proposed to extend over the entire country a permanent and economical system of maintaining the central hatcheries, auxiliary egg-collecting stations, to be operated only during the spawning season.

Another effort will be made to introduce Pacific salmon in Eastern waters. Five million eggs will be transferred from the California stations to stations in New York, Vermont and Maine, and the fry liberated in the Penobscot, Kennebec, Merrimac, Hudson, Delaware and Susquehanna Rivers. Attention has also been paid to increasing the output of Atlantic and land-locked salmon at the Maine station, and indications point to a large increase over previous years. Lake trout eggs collected will aggregate 18,000,000 or 20,000,000. The cod work will surpass all previous seasons, and 225,000,000 eggs are expected. Eastern oysters and lobsters were planted in California and Oregon waters in October, and diamond-back terrapin in San Francisco bay. Eggs of the steel-head trout, a California game fish, have been planted in streams tributary to Lakes Superior and Huron and the Penobscot River.

PLANTS THAT EAT MEAT.

The Sundew One of the Most Interesting Insectivora.

Godey's Magazine has this to say about plants that eat meat: "One of the most interesting of the insectivora is the sundew. The five or six small leaves lay close to the ground, and each of them bore a crown of dew-drops, which sparkled in the sunshine like rubies and diamonds. A slender scape sprang from the rosette of leaves and from one side of it drooped some small white flowers.

"Sundew is the poetic name given it because of the gleams of the gemlike drops on the leaf surfaces, but in spite of its beauty it is a little savage of vegetable life. Most plants absorb nourishment from the soil and atmosphere, but the sundew will drink milk and eat beef and mutton and hard-boiled eggs, if they are fed to it. It does not keep a cook, however, so it catches its own dinner. Each leaf is covered with a number of tiny reddish tentacles, and at the end of each tentacle is a little gland, to which adheres a drop of sticky fluid.

"While watching the sundew we saw a gay little fly in a gauzy draw near. Hovering over the leaf he lightly poised above it and prepared to sip the viscid drops. In a moment his feet were entangled and he was a prisoner.

"The second the feet of the insect press ever so lightly the glands—the motor impulse, as it is called—flies with unimaginable rapidity down through the tentacles, communicating with all upon the leaf, and they at once bend in the direction of the exciting object—the fly, in this case.

"As soon as the feet of the fly touched the tentacles, that wonderful change in them, which is called aggregation, began. The purplish protoplasm, which flows unceasingly in their cells, separated into tiny masses of purple matter floating in a clear liquid. The fly had alighted on the leaf a little to the left of the center, and the tentacles nearest him naturally bent first and deposited upon the next, and so on until he was gradually rolled to the center.

"Meanwhile every gland secreted a digestive fluid which is strongly acid, and is, so far as can be ascertained, identical with the digestive fluid of animals. This fluid poured over the fly, drowning him, the tentacles bent closer, and the leaf hollowed itself like a cup and closed; when, after several days, it should expand, all traces of the insect will have disappeared, digested and absorbed into the life of the plant."

Fifty-two Feet of Whiskers.

The statistican, who had been busy with his pencil, looked up at the man who hates figures and said:

"Didn't have anything to do and thought I'd figure a little. You know that if I were cast on a desert island with a bundle of lead pencils and plenty of paper I wouldn't care a cent whether a sail hove in sight or not. I saw that you needed a shave and that set me to thinking. Why do you shave, anyhow? I never do. Look here:

"We'll suppose that you began shaving at 18 years of age and that you keep it up until you are 70. That makes fifty-two years. You have a heavy beard. We'll suppose that you shave twice a week. That costs 15 cents a shave and you get rid of one-eighth of an inch of hair. That will be a quarter of an inch a week, or one inch a month. To get rid of that inch you pay $1.20. An inch a month is twelve inches a year, costing you $14.40. Now," and the statistican drew a long breath.

"Twelve inches a year for fifty-two years is 624 inches, or fifty-two feet. It will cost you $748.80 to get that amount of whiskers out of your system."

After a Chinese Wedding.

On the day following a Chinese wedding, at least in certain provinces, the bride's youngest brother goes to inquire after her and to take a present from her mother of a bottle of hair oil. This is a custom so ancient that none know the origin thereof. No further communications take place between the bride and her family for three months, when her mother sends a sedan chair and an invitation to visit her. If there has been neither a birth nor a death in her husband's or in her mother's house for 100 days she goes and makes a short stay at her old home. This visit over, she cannot see her mother again until after her first child is born, and not then, should the child be a girl. Even then, if there has been a death in either family the visit cannot be made, and there have been many instances where a mother and daughter living very near each other have not met for years.

Swallows and Pigeons.

Some time ago the experiment was made of letting loose at Compiegne a swallow belonging to Antwerp in company with a number of pigeons. The swallow immediately made a bee line for home, and arrived there in one hour, while the pigeons required three hours.

Another Labor Union.

Diggs—I see by the paper this morning there was a "tie-up" on one of the Western trunk lines yesterday.

Biggs—That so? What was the cause?

Diggs—Oh, a silly couple thought it would be romantic to get married in a parlor car.

Some people win a reputation for being good-humored because they lack the backbone to fight when they are imposed upon.

A girl may not be able to hit the side of a barn with a brick, but she can always throw kisses straight.

The Minister.—A minister must be a follower, as well as a leader, of his people, and his deeds and words must always harmonize.—Rabbi Isadore Myers, Hebrew, San Francisco, Cal.

Men and Churches.—People like a man who believes in himself; they like a church that has convictions and the courage to maintain them.—Rev. Frank Crane, Independent, Chicago, Ill.

Depravity.—No totally depraved man ever lived. Sitting Bull said some good last words: "God Almighty made me an Indian. God Almighty never made me an agency Indian."—Rev. M. W. Reed, Independent, Denver, Colo.

City Dangers.—The city is destructive of womanhood. Turn a young girl loose in any of our great cities and you might as well turn her loose on some lonely South Sea island.—Rev. William Rader, Congregationalist, San Francisco, Cal.

Marriage.—To be model husbands, in the loftiest sense, we must be true Christians. For marriage is not simply the wedlock of bodies, but of spirits. It is the union of the entire personality.—Rev. G. B. Vosburg, Baptist, Denver, Colo.

Blood of the Poor.—New York is building herself up with the blood of her poor, who are crowded into wretched tenement houses, with mismanaged schools and criminally neglected alms houses and prisons.—Rev. H. T. Shepherd, Congregationalist, San Francisco, Cal.

Man and Reason.—Man is a reasoning animal. He alone is capable of perceiving truth, of discerning falsehood, of sifting out fallacies, of weighing evidence, of thinking. To think is a high prerogative.—Rev. U. S. Milburn, Universalist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Missionary Work.—The field of missionary efforts in the direction of gathering into the churches often seems to me as large in the region of the wealthy and well-to-do as among the wage-earners and less favored parts of society.—Rev. E. A. Horton, Unitarian, Boston, Mass.

Wealth.—I am no communist, and believe not in the equi-distribution of wealth. If a man works for his money he has a right to have it. Because we are lazy, do not grumble because some one else is willing to slave.—Rev. Frank Talmage, Presbyterian, Chicago, Ill.

The Price of Liberty.—Every forward movement of thought has brought about a bitter contest, and in the struggle which has been carried on in every line of human thought many men have had to pay a high price for the liberty which they demanded.—Rev. M. J. Savage, Unitarian, New York City.

Solitude.—The superior spirits are more or less alone. Shakspeare hasn't much company. There are few to walk with Francis d'Assissi or Fenelon. The heroes retire into the solitude of their singular work and there are few to understand them.—Rev. C. L. Thompson, Presbyterian, New York City.

Empty Pews.—When the spirit of selfish exclusiveness in the church has given place to the broad spirit of adaptiveness, and the church becomes all things to all men in the Pauline sense, ministering to all men and all of the man in all ways, our pews will be full.—Rev. C. A. Dickinson, Congregationalist, Boston, Mass.

St. Paul's Influence.—Eighteen centuries and more have passed since Paul said: "I am not ashamed of the gospel." Thousands have been ashamed of it and are forgotten. But the power and influence of Paul's life and letters are still felt and acknowledged by multitudes.—Rev. J. K. Montgomery, Presbyterian, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Catholic Unity.—The recent efforts of Leo XIII. in favor of Christian unity show the position of the church toward the classes and the masses. She would bring all the children of Adam into her heart, warming them with charity, inspiring them with hope, and saving them through faith in Jesus, the Lord.—Rev. J. P. O'Donnell, Catholic, Boston, Mass.

Apple Tree Eighty Years Old.

The oldest, first planted and largest apple tree in Porter County, Indiana, has become defunct after seventy years of continuous fruit bearing. It is the last landmark of pioneer days in the county.

When Valparaiso was yet in its infancy and known to the early settlers of Porter County as Portersville, three good-looking apple trees were planted in the southwestern part of what was once the original site of Valparaiso. In the course of events two of them were taken away. For forty years Mrs. Lucinda Brewer has reaped a rich harvest of the fine apples borne by the other every year.

Recently an angry gale handled its aged stature too roughly, broke its silvery, heavy loaded branches, and snatched off its massive trunk about ten feet from the ground. It measured seven feet in circumference and was nearly 80 years old. It is estimated that it has yielded about 600 bushels of apples.

Antiquity of Mirrors.

Mirrors are known to have been in use as far back as 1279. Before glass was invented horn and metal were used. Anglo-Saxon women carried small ones slung to their girdles, and beauties in the time of James I. and Elizabeth had them in the center of their fans.

Britain and Mining.

Britain occupies a very high place in mining of all kinds. More than 600,000 of her people are employed at the industry, and they produce over £8,000,000 worth of minerals annually.

THE LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEER.

He Tells a Story Which Sounds Like a Book.

A locomotive engineer should be one of the most truthful of men. That's why this little story of a Southern engineer should be believed implicitly.

"You may talk as you please about red-headed women," he was saying to a group of listeners, among whom was a Star reporter, "but a red-headed woman saved my life and established a home for herself all at once. I was 25 then and was running a freight on the C. & O. in the West Virginia mountains, where it took talent to run an engine. My division ended at Hinton, and there was a red-headed girl lived about six miles to the east, where there was a siding near a big cut and fill, and it was a bad place, as the road was new.

"The girl's name was Maggie Conroy, and she had the reddest head I ever saw on a human being's shoulders outside of a torchlight procession. But I didn't care for that, and I did care for Maggie. One sunshiny day I was coming down track with a stock train loaded with some extra fine cattle and sheep, and I had in the caboose three of the owners. It had been raining and washouts were looked for, but I hadn't seen any and was bowling along at a good speed when all of a sudden at the curve I thought I saw a red light rising just over the track. It seemed to shine like a blaze in the track, and before I took time for a thought I had shut off the steam, whistled down the brakes and was doing my best to stop.

"Right then my fireman give me the haw haw in a way to chill the blood in the veins of a man who can't stand teasing, and I took a look forward and found that the red light I thought I saw was only Maggie's head of red hair sticking up in advance as she pulled herself up the steep embankment to get onto the track. With an oath I opened everything again, but as I did so Maggie threw up her hands and dropped in a dead faint by the track, and I stopped off everything again, for I felt sure that something was wrong. I had half an hour or so leeway between trains, and I shook Maggie up as quickly as I could to find out what was the matter. She came around mighty soon, because she had only fainted from overexertion, and she told me how a big bowlder had fallen on the track in a curve near her house that I wouldn't have seen till it was too late to stop for, and she had run across the spur of the mountain to stop me in time if she could.

"That's what she was trying to do when her red head shone like a danger signal and stopped me. Later the owners of the stock gave her money enough to buy a nice little house at Hinton and six months later I moved in. We've got the house yet, but we don't live in it," concluded the engineer, "for it wasn't big enough for a family of six children, and not a red-headed one in the lot."—Washington Star.

Water Wound the Watch.

Several traveling men were swapping yarns in a Chestnut street cafe in competition for drinks. This story won for its narrator a round of drinks from each of the other raconteurs:

"When I was up in the lumber district of Pennsylvania this summer," said he, "I met a lumberman who said he had come from Maine to get his watch. 'Where is your watch?' I asked. 'In soak,' said he. 'Now,' he continued, 'you think I mean that it's in pawn, but it isn't. It's really in soak up the river here apiece. I'm going up to get it; do you want to go along?'

"I went with him, and on the way he told how he came to leave his watch in the river. Last winter while working on a log jam, he dropped his watch, which was of the screw-bevel, dust-proof and water-proof type, into the water. The river was only six feet deep there and he could see the watch very plainly as it lay on the bottom, face up.

"There was a freeze coming on, however, and he hadn't time to stop and get it then. Shortly after he was called away to Maine, but he took the precaution before going to mark the spot where the watch lay. Well, we found the place all right, and peering down into the clear water we saw the watch shining among the pebbles. We had it up in a jiffy, and, strange to say, it was still running.

"In fact, it hadn't lost five minutes in all those five months. You see the current of the river was running in and out there all the time, and the action of the current on the stem of the watch kept the timepiece wound up."—Philadelphia Record.

A Day's Variance in Weight.

Have you ever tried this experiment of weighing yourself in the morning and again in the evening? It is one of the best ways, so doctors say, of finding whether your health is good or not. If you are thoroughly well there should not be a difference of more than two or three ounces either way in the twelve hours. If you lose or gain as much as eight ounces you shiuld immediately consult a doctor, while the gain or loss of a pound indicates you are on the verge of serious illness. This, of course, does not apply to one just recovering from illness, for convalescents who have been much reduced may sometimes gain fifteen to twenty ounces a day.

Archæological Discoveries.

Wholesale archaeological discoveries have been made at Martres Tolosane, in the Pyrenees, near the banks of the Garonne. Seventeen Roman statues and the bust of a woman, with many other fragments, pieces of mural decoration, glassware, and locksmith's work were found while digging the foundations for a house. It was at Martres that a Venus was discovered many years ago, whose head was taken as the model for the standard bust of the republic, which now adorns all French town halls.

One Woman's Wisdom.

Widow—Have you read the will?

Lawyer—I have tried to, but it is in your late husband's handwriting and I can't make anything out of it.

Widow—Well, if you can't make anything out of it there can be but little in it for any one else.

Ian Maclaren on Scott.

"Scott was all gold, and even the nuggets are not enough; the gravel ought to be sifted and the gold dust gathered in, for Scott had such an affluence of knowledge, legend and poetry that he did not write by measure, but put his hand into his pocket and threw out money that any might pick it up. What one is afraid of is that Scott is being raised to the elevation of a classic, and that is the same thing as taking a man out of the house of commons, where he is an active figure, and placing him in the stately seclusion of the house of lords. I do not know a single page of Scott that is not readable, and I do not know a single page that would shake a man's faith or bring a blush to a woman's cheek. Why do not people read Scott as they ought to? Some say that he is not interesting, and others object to his style. Why, Carlyle himself brought the charge against Scott that he was amusing. Amusing! One of the grandest functions of fiction is to be amusing in the right sense—that of lifting up the weight and care of daily life from men's minds by leading them into regions of sentiment and romance."

BRAVE SPIRITS BROKEN.

How often women wake up in the morning cheerful and happy, determined to do so much before the day ends, and yet:—

Before the morning is very old, the dreadful BACKACHE appears, the brave spirit sinks back in affright; no matter how hard she struggles, the "clutch" is upon her, she falls upon the couch, crying:—"Why should I suffer so? What can I do?"

Lydia E. Pinkham's "Vegetable Compound" will stop the torture and restore courage. All such pains come from a deranged uterus. Trouble in the womb blots out the light of the sun at midday to a vast number of women. You should procure Mrs. Pinkham's Compound at once and obtain relief.

Mrs. F. M. Knapp, 563 Wentworth Ave., Milwaukee, Wis., says: "I suffered with congestion of the ovaries and inflammation of the womb. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me as it will others."

SAFETY IN BUYING SEEDS.

There is no other way to measure the value of seed than by the value of the crop. A good crop simply cannot come from poor seed. Second-rate seeds will waste good land, good fertilizer, and good labor, and the crop won't pay expenses. Now, as the practical farmer cannot afford to waste time testing seeds to find out whether they are true to name, sound and clean, it stands to reason that the only safe way to buy seeds is to seek the protection of a name that has stood for reliability in the past. The great seed house of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich., has sold seeds all over the United State and Canada for the last forty-two years, and the steady growth of the business is a sure indication that Ferry seeds have given satisfaction. Ferry's Seed Annual for 1898, a standard guide for farmers and gardeners, containing much valuable information, is sent free to persons writing for it.

CLEO'S THRIFTY MOTHER.

Washed and Ironed the Dancer's Clothes and Walked Miles For Twenty Cents.

The parsimony of foreign celebrities who come to this country has been frequently amusing to Americans. There have been some very striking instances of it in recent years, but the mother of Mlle. Cleo de Merode seems to have carried off the palm in this respect. Salvini, it is said, was so penurious that he bought a sandwich on the street for 5 cents rather than pay for his supper at a hotel, and one of the stories told about him on his last visit to this country was that once in Philadelphia he gave the porter of a hotel a penny and told him to buy him three tacks. The actor had discovered that his trunk was damaged, and he wanted to repair it himself.

Tamaqua was notorious here for his stinginess. It was said that he sold the tickets sent to him in view of his artist's privilege and hired his own brother as a valet because he could be got at a cheap figure. Then he used to make him roll his trunks around on a truck at the foreign custom houses rather than pay the porters a fee for the work. Herr Van Biene marked as a curiosity and sent back to England a hotel bill of fare on which he had marked the price, $1.50, for a tenderloin steak as one of the wonders of an extravagant and youthful country. It may have been nothing more than good business judgment which prompted Mlle. Calve to look for a business manager while she was here and then express the greatest astonishment that such an assistant of the most capable kind could not be hired for $10 a week.

These are some of the stories told about the highly paid foreigners who come to exhibit themselves here. But Cleo's mother holds the record. It is said that she astonished the servants at the Imperial hotel by washing her daughter's clothes in the bathtub and ironing them herself. On the day before they returned to Europe the ballerina and her mother were seen on lower Broadway. They had gone down to one of the exchange offices in order to get $100 in French money. It was raining. An acquaintance met the two just as they were coming out of the office.

"Why, that wretch inside," exclaimed the mother indignantly, "wants to give me only 517 francs for $100." Then Mme. la Mere de Cleo de Merode put up her umbrella with a mighty emphasis and stepped out on to the sidewalk. "Why, a man offered me 518 up town. But I thought I could get 520 down here. Now we shall have to walk up town, for otherwise there will be no profit left for us." Then Cleo and her mother started to trudge up town. The dancer received $9,000 for her appearances here.—New York Sun.

M-M-M!

Oh, don't I love my lady?
Mm-m-m-m! You ought to see
How she comes out to meet me
And goes wandering off with me,
With her cheeks so like a blossom
And her neck so like the snows—
Oh, don't I love my little girl?
M-m-m!—Nobody knows!

Oh, don't I love my lady?
Mm-m-m-m! You ought to hear
The little name she calls me
When she whispers in my ear,
With her eyes so bright and dancing
Till my heart a-patter goes—
Oh, don't I love my little girl?
M-m-m!—Nobody knows!

THE VOICE OF GOD.

IN the cold of a winter's night, beneath the yellow glare of a city lamp, a tall man stood with a little weary child.

A cruel wind blew the rain around them. It dashed it into the man's face, so that it trickled down his chin and fell on the brown head trying to cuddle against his coat.

A feeble cry broke every now and then from the little fellow—a cry of protestation and alarm. "Daddy—Daddy—cruel Daddy. Take me home—take me home!"

A shudder shook the man from head to foot. A sob rose in his throat—he could not speak. His arms went more closely round the little body leaning against him, and he began to move on slowly and to mix with the crowd.

"Daddy, daddy, take me home!"

"Ah, Christ!"

"It was not an oath, but the pitiful, appealing cry of a broken spirit. The man in him was crushed and tortured; his heart was bleeding itself to death.

Love for his wife and child had given this man a soul. Evil passions had burnt themselves out before the fire of that pure devotion; a mighty tenderness had sprung up with the light in his baby's eyes.

Wonderful future schemes for the happiness of mother and child had filled his leisure moments and made the music of his life. He had worked bravely and cheerfully, he had been tender and true and patient, and his love had taught him to pray.

He had been at peace—and happy.

And now his heart was broken.

The cruel wind blew the rain round them and dashed it coldly into their faces; but other drops that were not rain fell on the curly head of the child.

When a brave man weeps there are tears of blood that well up from his heart and blind his eyes; and no power on earth can heal the wound below.

The fretful wail of a little voice, the frightened clutch of chubby fingers only made the agony more intense. There is no peace to be found in anything when despair first rushes with all its force into a human soul.

"I want my mother!"

"Baby—haven't I told you—you've no mother!"

The noise and the glare are left behind at last. There is a long, silent street and a narrow bridge, and dark water creeping beneath. Here there is quiet to think in at last.

By the edge of the wall is a seat cut in the stone. The man sits down in one corner of it, and after looking carefully to make sure that the boy sleeps turns round so that he can watch the deep water below.

"It will be mortal cold," he tells himself, "and awful just at first. But then it will soon be over, and better and easier than years of pain. God would punish him of course, but only him. He would understand how sorely he had been tempted, and he would not make the punishment too hard. He would let him be with his boy at last. Hadn't they only got each other?"

The child moved uneasily, and the man bent over him caressingly, anxious even at such a moment that nothing might be the matter. He peered at the closed lids and pushed some hair back very tenderly from the high, moist forehead.

"God bless him," he thinks. Then, "he sent him this sleep, he didn't mean him to know. It will be just like going to bed for him, but with a beautiful morning at the end."

In a minute it should be done.

* * * * * * *

It was terribly cold. Like stabbing ice, and being drawn down into a great crack. But after the rush and horror of it the stillness came, and then darkness, and space, and solitude.

It was lonely in this Valley of Shadow. But when it was past there was a new light everywhere.

The spirit of this man watched and waited. He had lost his child in the valley, but did not doubt he made one of the many radiant beings gliding quickly past him with their heavenly guides.

At the end of a long time he reached the shining gates, and through the bars he heard sweet music and caught glimpses of an eternal paradise.

Such rejoicing he had dreamed of sometimes when on earth, but it brought him no peace or comfort now. He stood motionless, waiting and fearing he knew not what, when his eyes lighted on a child angel standing near the gate, and in that pure and lovely countenance he recognized his son.

But the joy that leaped into his face faded as suddenly as it came. There was a great and terrible reproach in the eyes that met his own—the sadness there could have made him weep.

"Where is my mother?"

"I know not—how could I know? I left her long ago upon the earth."

"She has passed the Valley of the Shadow since. Where is she now?"

"Alas, I cannot tell. We parted long ago."

"But to thee wast given her soul to bring to the throne of God. What hast thou to say?"

"I have nothing to say."

"The love of all the world dwelleth beyond these gates. Hast thou love to plead thy cause?"

"I left the earth because the earth was full of sorrow. My trouble was greater than I could bear."

"You fled from pain—but God did not call thee here. God had appointed thee a precious task. To those alone who pass through the furnace of living pain can the crown of peace be given. Would I might help thee, but none can save thee now. As thou forsook thy trust, so has thy God forsaken thee."

Then he knew his worst forebodings were fulfilled. He stretched out his arms and would have cried for mercy, but heaven grew dim and far away, and with it the sad face of the speaker vanished forever from his sight. Then a cold, bitter blast rushed down upon him and he was cast shuddering upon his face.

* * * * * * *

"Daddy, daddy, wake!"

With a start the sleeper opened his eyes and looked up. On the seat where he had been lying his little boy had climbed and was now tugging with all his small might at his father's coat and peering down horror-stricken into his face.

"O, daddy, daddy! I've finished all my prayers—but you wouldn't wake—I couldn't make you wake!"

"Never mind, my little darling—never mind it now. We're going home—we're going home—we're to go back home—after all. O, Sammy, Sammy!"

* * * * * * *

Still later, but on the same night, a man footsore and weary, sat by a window, watching.

In the same room, on a chair, and rolled round with a blanket, was a little boy sleeping heavily. Close to the fire was an empty porridge bowl, and over the back of a chair some clothes had been spread out to dry.

The night crept on and the gray dawn came, but the watcher had not moved, and the blind was not drawn down.

But what he was waiting for came at last.

A shadow crossed the window, a low but certain cry of pain disturbed the silence of the street outside.

Then the man rose, and, moving slowly to the door, opened it very wide. At his feet on the step a woman crouched and moaned. When he spoke she lifted up a hard, despairing face.

"Nell!"

"I'm going—I'm going at once. I never meant to come, but something—the child——"

"Has he left you?"

"Yes. I'm glad of it, though."

"What are you going to do?"

"To live, you mean? O, there are ways—it don't matter—I'm past fretting for, you know." Then, "Rob! you've been good to me always—you'll be good to the child, now that—now——"

"It's cold out here—you're shivering, too, lass—there's a fire inside."

But the woman staid on her knees, clinging weakly to the hands put out to help her up.

"Rob—Rob! You don't mean it—you're dreaming Rob! Why, I've broke yer heart—I know I've broken it. I can't never come back here. I wish I was dead!"

But the man was strong and he had raised her in his arms.

"Nell—it'll be hard—mighty hard, for both of us—but we'll try, God helping us! An' Nell—there's a little chap inside waiting to be put to bed. He's rolled in a blanket—we couldn't find his shirt. * * *"

On the floor of the cottage a man and woman knelt together, gazing yearningly into each other's sorrowful eyes—and round each neck was a loving little arm, and a sleepy baby voice was the only sound they heard.—Chicago Tribune.

Hutukhtu of Yenyinchichenhua.

The Pekin Gazette of June 7 last contains a memorial from the Chinese general in command at Kuldja, asking the emperor to sanction an avatar. A certain ruler—named Kung-mu-pa-t'u-kun—the emperor in the '60s, when the Mohammedan rebels had overrun all the country round. He has died; and the mu-pa-ju-p'u-chun held Tarbagatai for Mongol tribes among whom he dwelt are anxious to have him once more among them. At their request, accordingly, the memorialist "begs that a special edict may be issued granting permission to the heroic soul hutukhtu to become an avatar—in other words, that his spirit be permitted by special grace of the throne to become re-embodied, to serve again the sacred dynasty for the preservation of which he fought so valiantly." The emperor assents, and appoints him, beforehand, Hutukhtu of the Monastery of Yenyinchichenhua.—London Saturday Review.

The Richest Town.

The richest town in the United States is Brookline, near Boston. Its population is 17,000, and valuation $60,000,000, yet it is governed through the typical New England town meeting. It has a public library containing 45,000 volumes, a $300,000 high school, a $40,000 free bathing establishment, and spends $100,000 a year on its parks and well-shaded streets. Boston would gladly annex it, but Brookline prefers to go on as it is.

QUESTION AS TO WHAT HE OWES TO THE PUBLIC.

So Doubt that Physicians Are Greatly Imposed Upon by Unscrupulous People—Say from 25 to 60 Per Cent. of Their Work Is Donated.

Night Calls Often Needless.

A question of considerable interest to the medical profession is coming up in the large cities as to the rules that should govern miscellaneous night calls. Some physicians, while not upholding a doctor in heartlessly weighing his fee in the balance with a human life, declare that doctors are imposed upon so often day and night by those able to pay for his services, but failing to do so, that he is justified in consulting his personal desires and comfort before answering a call. So much of a physician's work is practically charity, they say, that he is at liberty to use the same prudence about undertaking the work offered him by strangers that any other professional man is. Other physicians assert vehemently that every reputable doctor will answer any call, that it is part of his religion to be ever ready to succor the afflicted owing to the peculiar nature of his profession, and that it is not comparable to the stand that might be taken for a fee by an attorney or a man in any other business whose services might be sought by a stranger. They say that the emergency which usually exists when a doctor is called in the night should be sufficient incentive to him to respond to the call and take his chance of being paid later; that a case of life and death cannot wait until the morrow, as a lawsuit or any other business might.

Physicians of years of experience in general practice in Chicago make the startling statement that from 25 to 60 per cent. of a doctor's work is donated. Some physicians say about one-third of their time and experience goes for nothing, others place it at a quarter, and two declare that fully 60 per cent. was never paid for. Some of this work, of course, they know will not be paid for, that done at hospitals and for people who frankly confess their inability to meet the bill. But it is the other part that rubs. It is the bills of people who can and will not pay that make doctors shy about going out on night calls and increasing the annual percentage of charity work. It is well known that doctors donate a far greater percentage of their work than other professional men do. The medical charities of a great city like Chicago, says the Chronicle, are enormous in the aggregate. The time that is donated by hundreds of doctors to hospitals and dispensaries is worth many thousands of dollars, and by many in the profession the claim is made that the doctors are far too liberal in this regard since the free dispensaries and hospitals are taken advantage of by people well able to pay for medical attendance, and thus the profession is cheated out of thousands of dollars every year.

In very many of the cases where doctors are called upon at night and urged to hasten to the bedside of a dying child such action would not be necessary had the parents of the child taken precaution to visit a dispensary the day before and secure what was necessary for the suffering little one. Complaints of a serious nature do not often originate at 2 o'clock in the morning. Very often when a doctor is thus called upon at night to render immediate aid with no fee in sight when he asks for the history of the case he learns the child has been ill for two or three days, but "it did not look serious and we didn't think we would need a doctor until to-night." Then at an early hour in the morning, after having had a few days in which to seek the free aid that is at their disposal, they call upon a professional man to leave his bed, with no prospect of remuneration, and attend the case of the child.

A favorite trick of panic-stricken families in an emergency, the doctors say, is to call up half a dozen doctors at once in order to be sure and have enough of them on hand. If a member of the family awakes the household with agonizing groans and a bad case of cholera morbus everyone decides he is going to die in half an hour, and someone rushes to the nearest telephone and calls up all the doctors in a radius of a mile. Neither knows the others have been called, but, anxious to save a life and with the appeal of the frenzied one still ringing in his ears, hastens to dress. Then he goes to a dark and cheerless barn and hitches a tired horse by the light of a lantern, and with the sleep still in his eyes is soon speeding toward the house. From other directions half a dozen other physicians are coming, but they are met at the door by a member of the household, who is "So sorry, but we couldn't wait, and Dr. Brown gave an injection of morphine and he's all right now."

A juncture where the physician feels decidedly chary of giving his services is in a case where a doctor has been in attendance on a patient for days and has prescribed a certain course of treatment by the family. But in the night the patient appears to become worse, his breathing becomes light or his pulse rapid and in alarm some member of the family rushes for the nearest doctor. He is told breathlessly at the door that a man is dying in the next block and unless he hurries a life will have slipped away. In nine cases out of ten the doctor will hastily dress, and without asking any more questions take his medicine case and start for the house. There he finds a table covered with bottles and pills and powders left by the other physician, and is told that they would have sent for the other doctor only he lives so far away. Of course that sort of thing does not tend to make a physician fall in love with night messages. He finds a case almost at his door which was passed over his head to a doctor in another part of town when the patient became ill, but when a crisis arises the family rushes to the nearest doctor, and in nine cases out of ten he is not paid for the call. After a few dozen of these experiences he is a little shy about chasing out into the night on a hurry call.

The majority of doctors, however, go on the principle that a physician's time is not his own, that he is enlisted in the cause of suffering humanity and should be ready at all times to render aid to the needy. These doctors for the most part are the younger generation who have not had so many hard knocks as their gray-bearded brethren and who are striving to build up a practice in the fierce competition which obtains in large cities. They insist that whoever calls on a doctor at any hour for aid should be answered at once. They look at the question from a humanitarian point of view more than a utilitarian, and openly say that the medical profession owes it to the public to be every ready to respond to a call.

That there is a great deal of injustice on the part of the public cannot be doubted, and it is also true that if the public would consider a physician not as a bounden servant, but as a professional man full of duties, and never infringe on his night leisure except in cases of real urgency, the man of medicine would always meet patients half-way. It is an error to suppose that a doctor is compelled to consider all calls. There is no law strictly covering the case, while many eminent physicians declare it to be a part of their religion to regard calls, whether they bring fees or not, as part of a bounden duty, they as well point to the fact that a failure to solve the problem of just when a physician should be required to give his time at unreasonable hours for nothing, has driven many persons out of the profession.

Kien Long and His Physicians.

There used to be related a curious anecdote of old Kien Long, emperor of China. He was inquiring of Sir George Staunton the manner in which physicians were paid in England. When, after some difficulty, his majesty was made to comprehend the system, he exclaimed:

"Is any man well in England that can afford to be ill? Now I will inform you," said he, "how I manage my physicians. I have four, to whom the care of my health is committed. A certain weekly salary is allowed them, but the moment I am ill the salary stops till I am well again. I need not inform you that my illnesses are usually short."—Harper's Round Table.

Spitzbergen Hotel

The hotel recently erected in Spitzbergen is thus described: Built in Norwegian style, it has a large hall, and a quantity of smaller rooms, with thirty beds. It is also provided with a book for visitors' names, among which may now be seen those of Sverdrup, Fulda, Prince Hohenlohe-Schillingsfuerst, E. Vely, and others. The climate of Spitzbergen is said to have the most favorable influence on persons suffering from chest diseases.

FASCINATION OF FOIBLES.

Little Frailties May Make the Possessor of Them More Lovable.

"No man is sincerely and securely loved, except by those who know his foibles," says Sir Arthur Helps. Rousseau qualifies his recognition of faults in his old friend Gauffrecourt by the surmise that without them he would probably have been less amiable. In no works is this better exemplified than in those of Charles Dickens. "When I know all the foibles a man has, with little trouble in the discovery, I begin to think he is worth liking." And of Dickens' father, and his notable Micawberisms of speech and demeanor, he declares that no one could know him without liking him the better for them. No one likes Micawber less for his follies, and Dickens liked his father better the more he recalled his whimsical qualities.

One of the notable examples of the fact that foibles may rather endear than estrange is in Oliver Goldsmith. The epithet so often heard, and ever in kindly tones, of "Poor Goldsmith" speaks volumes. Writing of him, Washington Irving says that when eminent talent is united to spotless virtue, we are awed and dazzled into admiration, but our admiration is apt to be cold; while there is something in the harmless infirmities of a good and great but erring nature that pleads touchingly with ours. Irving is persuaded that few who consider the real compound of admirable and whimsical qualities which formed Goldsmith's character would wish to prune away its eccentricities, trim its grotesque luxuriance, and clip it down to the decent formalities of rigid virtue.

"Let not his frailties be remembered," said Johnson; "he was a very great man." Washington Irving would rather say, "Let them be remembered, since their chief end was to endear."

Oliver Wendell Holmes asserts that we must have a weak spot in any character before we can love it much. "People that do not laugh or cry, or take more of anything than is altogether good for them, or use any but dictionary words, may be admirable subjects for biographies; but we don't always care most for those flat-pattern flowers that press best in the herbarium."

The most non-exacting and most indulgent cannot, perhaps, fail to find some faults in the nearest and best friends; but in not a few cases, foibles are even the strengtheners of regards.

Poor Recommendation.

"I wonder why it is that foreign women never come to America for husbands?"

"They are probably afraid. American girls give our men such bad recommendations by marrying foreigners."—North American.

It is a waste of time to make love to a cold, unsympathetic girl. About the best you can expect from her is the Chilkoot pass.

Teacher—"Don't any of you know how to find mountains on the map? Now, look at this map of Alaska. What is that row or chain of dark, round spots?" Class (in chorus)—"Nuggets!"—Puck.

Alice—"What a gallant person Mr. Dunkley is. He never addresses me without beginning 'Fair miss.'" Dorothy—"Oh, that's force of habit. He used to be a street-car conductor."—Cleveland Leader.

Bowery Bill—"Say, young feller, you ought to stop smokin' cigarettes. Dey ain't good fer yer." Cholly—"W-why not?" Bowery Bill—"Look how nervous yer get just 'cause a gen'l'man asks yer fer a light."—Puck.

Teacher—"Well, Jane, what is your father's business?" Jane—"He's a collector, mum." Teacher—"And for whom does he collect money?" Jane—"He doesn't collect money. He's a collector of rags."—Boston Ideas.

She—"But surely you believe that the sins of the father are visited on the children?" He—"Rather. My governor promised to let me have a fiver this morning; but he lost it at poker last night, so I didn't get it!"—Punch.

"Boswell," said Dr. Johnson, meeting the biographer on the street, "I have been reading your manuscripts. There is a great deal about yourself in them. They seem to me to be Youmoirs rather than Memoirs."—Puck.

She—"If you could have one wish, what would it be?" He—"It would be that—that—oh, if I only dared to tell you what it would be!" She—"Well, go on. Why do you suppose I brought up the wishing subject?"—Chicago News.

Miss Quickstep—"What part of town are we driving through, Mr. Fibble?" Fweddy—"I haven't the least idea." Miss Quickstep—"I was aware of that. Still, I thought it possible you might know what part of town we are driving through."—Chicago Tribune.

Miss Ancient Wantiman (suddenly awakening)—"I see you have my pocket-book; but there's very little money in that compared with what I have in bank." Burglar (gruffly)—"Well, there ain't no way to git that!" Miss Ancient Wantiman—"H'm! Are you a single man?"—Puck.

"Borus, in your last novel you spoil the story by raising an insurmountable barrier between the hero and heroine, who certainly ought to have married each other." "I couldn't help it, Naggus. My wife insisted that I was the hero of the story myself, and she got jealous of the heroine."—Chicago Tribune.

NOTICE No. 320.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
Independence, Calif.
January 28, 1898.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT Hugh J. Cannon, whose postoffice address is Salt Lake City, Salt Lake county, State of Utah, has made application for a patent for twenty-nine hundred and fifty linear feet of the Confidence and Mendocino Lode bearing gold, situate in no organized mining district, Inyo county, State of California, and described in the official plats and field notes on file in this office as follows, viz:

Said Confidence mining claims described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at a pine post three (3) feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "L. L. S. M." (identical with old lode line monument at southerly end of lode) whence main working shaft bears N. 77 deg 15 min E. 0.45 chains and U. S. L. M. No. 72 bears S 77 deg 47 min E 4.54 chains distant.

Thence the variation of the magnetic needle be 15 deg 15min E along line of lode N 25 deg 15 min E 1.20 chains intersection of ravines 2.42 chains mouth of small tunnel 20 links to east 5.30 chains ravine course E and W and end of big outcrop 7.12 chains shaft No 2 30 links to right, 16 links deep on vein 7.40 chains hole 10 links to right 8.37 chains ravine course N E and S W 17.92 chains ravine course N E and S W 21.97 chains 1450 feet to pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "L.L.N.M." (identical with original load line monument at northerly end of lode.)

SURVEY OF EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES

Beginning at corner No. 1. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed U.S.S. 67, No. 1, identical with corner number 1 of Mendocino location of this survey. Whence U. S. location monument No. 72 bears N 20 deg 50 min E 1 1-10 feet. Said location monument is a granite stone 30 inches long, 20 inches wide, 6 inches thick, marked "U S L M No. 72," set 15 inches in ground with brass plate set in top, with conical mound of stone, 6 feet square and 4 feet high beside it. From said U. S. L. M. No. 72, mouth of Confidence tunnel bears N 53 deg 15 min W 3.94 chains, The top of main working shaft bears N 74 deg 15 min W 4.14 chains. And a hill just north of the bend where the road to the mine from Death Valley turns eastward (the only hill there that has large detached blocks of granite covering its east side) bears N 74 deg 37 min W about 3 miles 60 chains.

Thence the variation being 15 deg 15 min east.

Course No. 1, N 77 deg 34 min W 1.06 chains cross small ravine, course N W and S E 4.545 chains 300 feet to south lode line monument of this location, whence shaft No 1 bears N 36 deg 15 min E 3.48 chains shaft No. 3 bears N 19 deg 30 min E 12.12 chains 9.09 chains 600 feet to corner No. 2 identical with corner No. 5 Mendocino location of this survey.

A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone, scribed "U.S.S. 67 No 2," whence intersection of ravines bears N 75 deg 30 min E 2.12 chains thence deflecting 102 deg 49 min to right and along westerly boundary of this claim.

Course No 2, N 25 deg 15 min E 0.61 chains road in ravine 1.67 chains road to cabin 2.27 chains to the S W corner of cabin 39 feet by 60 feet 9.00 chains to ravine 21.97 chains 1450 feet to corner No. 3, a pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground in stone mound scribed "U.S.S. 67, No 3" whence location corner of this location bears north 66 deg 30 min west, 1.50-100 chains on north side of ravine. Thence deflecting 77 deg 11 min to right. Course No. 3, S 77 deg 34 min E 4.454 chains, 294 feet to north lode line monument of this location, previously described. Whence ravine bears N 25 deg 15 min E 1.67-100 chains, course E and W 7.39 chains 487 8-100 feet, to corner No 4 location corner of this location. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with stone mound scribed "U S S, 67, No. 4," whence ravine bears N 20 deg 50 min E 2.50-100. Thence deflecting 93 deg 24 min to the right. Course No. 4, S 20 deg 50 min W 7.50 chains ravine 10.50 chains. Branch of ravine 15.00 chains ravine 18.00 chains ravine 21.22 chains ravine 21.65 chains 1429 feet to corner No. 1, the place of beginning. Containing seventeen and 64-100 acres.

Said Mendocino mining claim is described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at a pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 in ches in ground, with mound of stone scribed "L.L.N.M" (identical with old line monument at northerly end of lode whence main working shaft bears N 77 deg 15 min E 0.45 chains and U.S.L.M. No 72 bears S 77 deg 47 min E 4.545 chains. Thence the variation of the magnetic needle being 15 deg 15 min E along line of lode S 34 deg 45 min W 0.50 chains small ravine course N W 1.80 chains small cut in outcrop of vein course E and W 2.20 chains shaft 60 feet deep, in vein, bears west 10 feet, 2.94 chains. South edge of gulch 21.70 chains north edge of gulch course E and W, 22.72 chains 1500 feet to pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 12 inches in ground in stone mound scribed "L.L.S.M." whence old lode line monument of this Mendocino location bears S 34 deg 45 min W 38 links distant.

SURVEY OF EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES.

Beginning at corner No. 1, identical with corner No. 1 of Confidence location of this survey. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone, scribed "U.S.S. 67 No. 1."

Thence the variation being 15 deg 15 min east.

Course No. 1, S 34 deg 45 min W 0.85 chains ravine course N W and S E 5.75 chains north side of gulch, course E and W 7.88 chains. South side of gulch, course E and W 21.21 chains. North side of gulch course E and W 22.73 chains 1500 feet to corner No. 2. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "U.S.S. 67 No. 2," whence corner of the location bears S 34 deg 45 min W 1.51 chains south side of gulch No. 2 bears 34 deg 45 min W 1.67 chains thence deflecting 67 deg 41 min to the right.

Course No. 2, N 77 deg 34 min W 4.545 chains 300 feet south lode line monument 5.85 chains 386.10 feet corner No. 3. A pine post 3 feet long, set 18 inches in ground, with mound of stone, scribed "U. S. S. 67, No. 3," on a ridge in center of gulch, no bearings available. Thence deflecting 19 deg 19 min right.

Course No. 3, N 58 deg 15 min W 3.35 chains 221 feet to corner No, 4 original location corner of the claim.

A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "U. S. S. 67, No. 4." Thence deflecting 93 deg 54 min to the right.

Dourse No. 4, N 35 deg 39 min E 0.45 chains. North side of gulch 13.35 chains; south side of gulch 15.61 chains; north side of gulch No. 1, 21.67 chains; 1430.4 feet; to corner No. 5 identical with corner No. 2 of Confidence location, this survey. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "U. S. S. 67, No. 2." Thence deflecting 66 deg 47 to the right.

Course No. 5, S 77 deg 34 min E 4.545 chains to north lode line monument previously described 9.09 chains, 600 feet; to corner No. 1, the place of beginning. Containing nineteen and 32-100 acres.

Said two claims being contiguous and constituting the Confidence and Mendocino Consolidated Quartz Mines, and being on unsurveyed public land of the United States, in Township 20, north of Range 5 east, San Bernardino meridian, and the nearest settlement is Ballarat about 40 miles to the Westward.

The location of said Confidence mine is recorded in the County Recorder's office of Inyo county, State of California, on page 441 of Book H of L. W. and M. claims. And the location of said Mendocino Mine is recorded in said Recorder's office on page 438, Book H of L. W. and M. claims.

Adjoining claimants are as follows: Said Confidence mine is bounded on the north by the Florence unsurveyed claim and on the south by said Mendocino claim, and said Mendocino claim is bounded on the north by said Confidence claim and on the south by the I X L claim, unsurveyed, and there are no claims located on the east or west of said claims.

All persons holding adverse claims thereto are required to present the same for this office within sixty days from the first day of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the statute.

The undying hope that the Comstock will recover same of iis departed glory is being again revived by a discussion of the possibilities and practicability of pumping out the deepest levels which have been so long flooded and abandoned, and sinking deeper in quest of new bonanzas. This seems feasible to mining men and the thing may be tried some of these days, especially if the prospecting of the Brunswick lode keeps on disappointing. The deepest shaft reached 3250 feet, and on the 3000-foot level good ore and indicationg were found in the Belcher, Yellow Jacket, and Hale & Norcross. This was in 1882, and the pressure for dividends prompted an abandonment of deep working and a return to the unworked ore bodies in the upper levels, which yielded millions before their riches were exhausted. As pumping operations would be conducted on the 1600 level, that of the Sutro tunnel, there is but about 1500 feet to unwater. As the chances are good that unreached bonanzas lie below the deepest workings, there is a fairly good that unreached bonanzas lie below the deepest workings, there is a fairly good promise that the enterprise will be carried out, and that Virginia City may again hum with life,

Masonic Installation.

On Saturday evening last the Masonic Lodge No. 221, publicly installed the following officers to serve for the ensuing term:

T. C. Boland, W. M.; J. S. Gorman, S. W.; J. W. Wright, J. W.; O. I. Mairs, Treas.; P. H. Mack, Sec.; J. A. McKenzie, S.D.; J. D. Mairs, J. D.; J. Shepherd, Marshal; Geo. Brady, Tyler; Jno. Anson and D. A. Johnson, Stewards.

As the Masonic lodgeroom was deemed unsafe for so large a crowd, the installation took place in the court room, which was filled to running over.

Immediately following the installation was a sumptuous banquet, to which a general invitation was extended the Mason's friends. The ladies of Independence had contributed the cakes for the occasion. and they proved beyond doubt that they are well up in the culinary art. Mr. Mairs furnished the more solid refreshments and Mrs. Blair made the coffee, which, it goes without saying, was of the best.

After everyone, great and small, had eaten their fill, the lovers of dancing adjourned to Mairs' hall, where Matlack's orchestra contributed free music for all to dance to.

Taken all round, it was one of the pleasantest occasions that Independence has to look back upon, and the Masons may congratulate themselves on a grand success.

COULDN'T MAKE IT.

The bull that tried to butt down a bridge, and the goat that tackled an anvil, couldn't make it, and were knocked out, bruised and bleeding. From such bruises down to pin-head blue spots they are curable, easily and surely. The men who get the worst bruises always get the best cure. They make it every time. There are right ways and wrong ways of doing things, as the bull and the goat found out. The best cure for a bruise is St. Jacobs Oil. The right way to cure is to use it and find out.

A London Physician Says the Former Will Cure the Latter.

Dr. Marcet of London recommends bicycle riding as a remedy for asthma. Here is what he says about it in a letter to The Medical Record: "If asthma is a form of mountain sickness and if that distressing affection of high altitudes can be cured by training for the exercise of climbing, why should not asthma also yield to the training of the respiration carried out by practicing the respiratory movements needed to carry the tidal air through the lungs? Of all means of training respiration I think cycling is the best. When a person first takes a cycling exercise, it will be found, especially on going up hill, that the breath is wanting, the heart beats uncomfortably and the legs tire, but after training these discomforts disappear, nothing will be thought of ascending hills, the heart has become perfectly comfortable, all breathlessness has disappeared and the legs will no longer feel any fatigue.

"Cycling exercise, first of all, increases the depth of breathing, and that without fatigue, as the respiratory movements are automatic. At the same time it will accustom the rider instinctively to take in at each respiration the volume of air required to aerate the blood. Persons who do not care for cycling out of doors can take the same kind of exercise at home by means of a dummy cycle, consisting of an iron wheel driven by pedals, the resistance of the wheel being so contrived as to simulate bicycle riding. A strap carried partly around the rim of the wheel can be tightened at will by the rider, thus increasing the labor and recalling the effort of riding up hill. My experience of the results of this treatment is unfortunately limited to only one person. In this case it has proved eminently successful. This person took to bicycle riding three years ago for pleasure and in very great moderation for the first two years. He observed that the attacks of asthma to which he was subject became fewer. The tightness and wheezing which occurred every night have now entirely disappeared."

WHALING FLEET IN DANGER.

It is predicted that the vessels of the whaling fleet, most of whose underwriters are in San Francisco, have been caught in the ice and some may not last through the siege. Danger also threatens those who neglect what are called "trifling" ailments, for they may not last through the crisis. Resort to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters at once for incipient rheumatism, malaria, constipation, nervousness and kidney complaint.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MOTHERS.

We are asserting in the courts our right to the exclusive use of the word "CASTORIA," and "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," as our Trade Mark.

I, Dr. Samuel Pitcher, of Hyannis, Massachusetts, was the originator of "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," the same that has borne and does now bear the fac-simile signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on every wrapper. This is the original "PITCHER'S CASTORIA" which has been used in the homes of the mothers of America for over thirty years. Look Carefully at the wrapper and see that it is the kind you have always bought, and has the signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on the wrapper. No one has authority from me to use my name except The Centaur Company of which Chas. H. Fletcher is President.

SISTER YSABEL'S SACRIFICE.

MIDNIGHT. The time the summer of 1879. Panic reigned in the little city on the gulf coast. Stampede more wild and terrible than that of frightened cattle possessed the people. A stampede more desperate than that of some thirteen years before when the citizens fled madly away to the forests and cities of the East to escape the rush of the conquering Yankees. From down the coast had come the dread tidings of the invasion of "Yellow Jack." Here was an enemy which they knew from horrid experience spared not. Neither man, woman nor child could hope to escape from his iron grasp if once he secured a firm hold on the town.

For several days there had been subdued terror pervading the community. Away at Mobile, Scranton, Pensacola and other coast towns they knew the flag of pestilence was hanging against the flagstaff. They knew that it was but a question of a few short hours when the yellow death would be among them. Patiently, with the fatalism of the natives of that clime, the Creoles had awaited its coming. They had suffered before and would suffer again, if it pleased the Divine Master to visit them with his wrath. But they were but a small portion of the populace. Even before the coming of the plague the people had been hastily preparing for that fearful exodus from home and kindred even, if by leaving relatives behind personal safety could be won.

It had come at last. The day before a schooner put into the little harbor. A sick seaman was taken ashore. He was infected as the doctors believed. All that day and until late at night men walked about the streets furtively watching each other, fearful of being stricken with the scourge by mere contact. The next morning men abandoned their usual occupations and marched in broken and irresolute columns toward the city hall. Would the fateful bulletin announce their doom? They gazed at each other in the same furtive, uneasy way which had marked the intercourse of neighbors and friends for more than a week. They feared to look and were yet drawn by the irresistible fascination of him who must learn the worst if death itself be the result. At last one man lifted hollow and fear-worn eyes to the bulletin board. With a wild shriek he turned and fled toward his home. It had come. Over on the little blackboard was a signal all knew. It was in the terse and significant language familiar to all who had faced the yellow death. It said:

"Seaman landed yesterday died of yellow fever at midnight. Two more deaths from the same cause have occurred since. Quarantine will be established at midnight. All who wish to leave will take notice.
GOODRICH, M. D.
WRIGHT, M. D."

That was all. But what a pregnant all to that people. Eighteen hours remained to leave or remain. Who should get away first? Certainty long expected gave wings to fear. Stampede, panic more terrible than that of animals walled in by fire succeeded to the silence and inaction of mere foreboding. Vehicles of all kinds rushed from the most unexpected places. Household goods hastily caught up borne along in the arms of family and servant added to the crowding of the already congested streets. Men fought and snarled like angry dogs to win a few feet farther from the infected city. Women dragging toddling babies unwillingly by the arms rushed frantically along in the vain endeavor to keep pace with the rapid strides of husband and father.

In the group of men who first stood about that bulletin board was George Kendrick, lumberman. Kendrick had faced death on many a stricken field and was a stranger to fear. He was a Yankee who had followed in the wake of the men who settled in the South after the war. Still a young man, he had brought his push and energy into the stronghold of the rebel and won fame, fortune and respect, if not genuine love. Tall, athletic and accomplished, he made his way with the tact of his shrewd, canny Scottish ancestry. He had been in Magnolia for several years, and, while he had never faced an epidemic, he had heard strange stories of the doings of the people when the yellow flag was hoisted on the city hall.

As he stood there in wonder and amazement at that fearful rush he was accosted by old Jim Butler, one of the leaders of the native element. Butler was a gaunt, sinewy "Johnnie" who had seen hot times in the war. He led his pretty daughter Mamie as he struggled with that crowd in the effort to reach the city hall for a temporary refuge. George loved Mamie with all the force of his strong, taciturn nature. He was loved in return, but the fateful words had not been spoken. The old man saw the mutual love and, while he did not relish a "Yank" for a son-in-law, was too good a father to bring sorrow to his only child.

"What are you doing there?" he called to the younger man. "Yellow Jack has come. Get away, man. Off to the woods or the North you came from. You won't last a day in this plague-ridden spot."

"Is it so bad as that?" was the careless reply. "Where do you go and why? I shall not leave until I know I must."

"Bad?" snorted Butler, in vast disgust. "You never fought a battle with Yellow Jack, I can readily see that. You see that sun up there? Well, it will blaze that way until November. No hope can come. The dreadful scourge will rule this town until all are dead or Jack Frost seizes him in his frozen grip and strangles him to innocence. This is what you stay to meet. Come away, for God's sake, and don't trifle with death. You are not acclimated yet and will fall as certainly as the sun will rise to blister and wither the fever-stricken people."

"Oh, do come with us," pleaded the girl, whose frightened eyes grew blacker with the greater fear aroused by her father's stern words. "Come to the pineries out of the city and away from this fearful heat. I implore you to come."

"Mebbe I might be of use here," was the Yankee's reply. "If it is as bad as you say, then help will be needed. Do you go, sir? Well, if you stay, I will also. I may be needed. Who can tell?"

"I have nothing to fear. You all," was Butler's answer. "Come and guard my child until this is over. I must stay to help maintain the quarantine which will be in force in a few hours. Remain until midnight and if you were the deity himself, stay you must."

Reluctantly the young man joined the stampede. He took the maiden's other arm and with her father made rapid strides to the hall. There they stood on the doorstep and watched the hurrying mob of battling, terrorized human beings, almost devoid now of all semblance to humanity. Butler's influence made it possible for them to hope to wait until the last train should leave. Then he determined that his child and her lover should race with death to a more northern city, where relatives would receive the girl and she and Kendrick might be safe from the epidemic.

All day long and until nearly the hour for the establishment of the quarantine the people rushed madly to the depot or out into the gulf. Every conveyance was impressed into service to remove loved ones from under the dreadful shadow. Calmly the natives waited the inevitable. Theirs was a nature to wait and pray and keep strict watch and ward that the hovering pestilence might be limited to their own town and not rush unchallenged into the interior or even invade the States north of Dixie. Up to this time yellow jack had been an affliction of Dixieland. It was soon to show its horrid front north of the Ohio and in cities where its presence was never thought possible.

As the mob grew in numbers with every train, men, long, lank but sinewy, types of the coast Southron, dropped from the incoming train. Rifles and shotguns were in their hands. Silently and steadily they strode over to the city hall, where they conferred with the Mayor. They were joined by others of the city itself. They would keep all within who remained and bar all out who were out after the big bell in the clock chimed the midnight hour.

At midnight now not far off the shotgun would rule. That was the law made by these stern men. It would place the little city under a martial law more terrible than any framed or enforced by the Yankee conqueror. Death might be the portion of all who were left behind. The gaunt ghost of pestilence stalked about the streets sparing none. But the death inside was not so swift nor so sure as that which awaited him who essayed to break that rigid line extending in a wide semi-circular sweep back from the water front around the city to the other beach from each to west. On the docks and in the railroad yards the guards stalked. Their tense faces and steely eyes were set with a determination which nothing human would shake.

As the time drew nigh when escape would be barred George Kendrick plunged into that seething, boiling mass of battling humanity. He held his sweetheart's arm closely and fought with the skill and desperation learned on many a hotly contested field. He needed all his great strength for ties made by him were rudely broken in that fierce scramble for advantage. He rushed into the yards still holding the panting and almost exhausted girl in a firm grasp. He fought his way blindly to the platform of the last car of the last train and by main strength landed his love thereon. As he was about to follow he was attacked from the flank and pushed momentarily from his position by a wild, desperate fellow, who sprang to the car, leaving a wailing and deserted wife behind.

"FATHER!" SHE CRIED, FALLING TO HER KNEES.

Kendrick saw the woman's peril. He lifted her in his brawny arms, swung her around and made her the means of clearing a space. Then he sprang forward and deposited her on the platform just as the bell tolled and the train slowly started to move. He rushed forward and was halted by a stalwart guard, who ordered him back. He remonstrated and struggled, telling the man that an unprotected girl was in that train and he must go to her aid.

"Can't help that. You don't go. Nobody leaves this place until the quarantine is lifted. Damn you, Yank, I'll break your head if you don't let up."

"Try it on, Johnnie," yelled Kendrick, infuriated by the resistance. He rushed on his foe and gamely struggled with him while the train was still in the yards. He tossed the big man to one side and toppled him over with a hard punch as he was falling. Then he rushed like a startled deer along that platform to rejoin the girl, whose white face appealed to him from the platform. As he made that desperate rush another guard sprang forward in the mass and struck him with clubbed rifle. He fell like a log as the train with increasing speed pulled out of the yards. On the rear platform lay the white, rigid form of the girl in a deadly swoon as she saw her lover struck down.

* * * * * * *

Out into the night rushed the train. Headed for the North, the people on board glanced fearfully behind them and hopefully to the front. Miles were eaten up before another town was neared. As the engine was rushing and shrieking along there was a sudden grinding of the wheels, a few panting snorts and the long train came to a standstill. All along the sides were armed men peering fearfully at the frightened people in the cars.

"You can't stop here," said their leader. "Just you run through as fast as steam will let you. Nobody gets off."

"Is that you, Hank?" said a man, joyfully, as he stepped to the platform and was about to descend to the ground. "Glad it's you. I want to come to your house. The wife and children are with me."

"Get back there. Didn't you hear me say nobody alights. Don't care if you are my brother. Stay on that train or I'll fill you with buckshot," was the grim reply, as the man covered his shrinking brother with his ready rifle.

Then on again rushed the train, the occupants filled with an even greater terror. Where could they go? Who would receive them? All the country was aroused. On all sides gleamed the guns which held them at bay. Death might be on the train. It was certainly out of it. On the rear platform a distracted girl struggled to a sitting posture as the train resumed its rapid flight. Two men standing huddled with the crowd near by saw her. She was ill. She might be suffering with the dread scourge. Must others suffer? No!

With a common impulse they rushed to where Mamie Butler lay half-extended on the platform, lifted her suddenly in their arms and shot the fragile form out into the wilderness, recking little of the almost certain death their cowardly and brutal act would entail.

Fortunately another swoon followed the first wild cry as the girl felt herself lifted in the arms of those brutes. She fell limp and helpless into a friendly clump of wayside bushes. Her fall was broken so that little injury resulted. But she was left in the swamp regions, miles from any human habitation, the prey of the elements, barred from intercourse with her kind by the rigid law of the "shotgun patrol," now fully organized all over the State. Slowly her senses returned. Slowly her desperate situation dawned upon her. Out in the wilderness without food, poorly clad in the hurry of the flight from Magnolia, and reared in a home of luxury, she was little fitted for any kind of fight. Her situation was such as to appall the most determined and stoical man. What could a frail girl do?

Slowly and painfully with badly bruised ankle she took up her way on the tracks. Where should she go? Home, of course. Her father was of the lines. He would admit his child, even if to the dangers of infection and death. Death from the plague at home with her loved ones was preferable and not more certain than out in that swamp. Home she would go. Bravely—for the girl had her father's rugged, forceful nature—she started to walk back to home and safety.

How that frightful journey was accomplished the half-delirious girl never knew. Three days and nights she wandered, driven away from every camp she approached by the same iron rule. Food she had none but wild berries and acacia buds. But on she struggled under the blistering heat or the cooler shades of night until at last she saw the tall tower of the city hall in the distance. Gratefully she sank in the sand and thanked heaven for her deliverance. Home was near and a loving father and sweetheart—if, indeed, he had not been stricken down to his death—were there to welcome and comfort her.

The thought of George's peril nerved her to greater exertion. She rose to her feet and once more bent her weary way toward home. As she reached the clump of pines which marks the outer boundary of the town a man suddenly stalked from their shade and ordered her back.

"Father," she cried, falling to her knees and then stumbling on again. "Don't you know me, father. I'm Mamie. I have come back to stay with you and George. Take me home," and the wasted arms were stretched imploringly toward her parent.

"Mamie," gasped Butler, hoarsely, "how did you come here? I thought you were in Memphis by this time."

"I was thrown from the train because a pair of brutes feared I had the fever. I have wandered in the woods for three days and am dying for lack of food. Take me home."

"Stand back, girl," was the stern reply. "You know the law. My God, why did you come here to tempt me. No, I cannot let you in. You know the law. Get back. Go over to the camp yonder and they will take you in."

The girl pleaded in vain. The inexorable law of Yellow Jack held her father powerless. With a shriek of despair she turned and ran away into the swamp to die.

Kendrick lingered unconscious for four or five days before his physique and fine condition won the battle of life. Then he slowly regained health under the careful ministrations of Dr. Wright, a young friend who took as much time as his manifold duties would permit in winning health again for the "Yank." Then with strength restored George sought work among the ailing. He feared no contagion and was soon looked up to and loved by the people of the stricken city. Death carts were the only conveyances seen in the deserted streets as the long, terrible summer passed slowly away; corteges with the bodies of victims in plain boxes followed by the men who were to lay them in the earth the only assemblies seen. Hot, fetid air, never cooled by the breezes of the gulf, added to the horrors of the lazaretto.

One night as Kendrick, worn out with his labors, sat in what had been his office, Dr. Wright entered, tossed his hat aside and began smoking in silence. Kendrick knew from his friend's manner that something of more than passing interest has marked the day. He waited for a time and then said: "Well, Doc?"

"George," slowly replied the physician, "I have a very peculiar case. It is a young nun who came in when old Dr. Stefano reached here from New Orleans. You remember my speaking of Sister Ysabel? Well, it is she. You know how she has slaved among the poor devils in this horrible hole. You can never know the devotion of this gentle maiden to her self-sacrificial duties. Evidently a woman of culture and refinement, she has slaved for the poor blacks as earnestly as for those of higher caste. Now she is ill—sick unto death. I have tried to learn who and what she is, but without success. To-night as she fell into delirium she muttered the word 'George' a couple of times. My God, man, what is the matter with you? I have feared it, you have the fever."

"No, doctor. No fever but that of terror. Feel my pulse, take my temperature and you will see the plague has exempted me so far. But you say she muttered my name?"

"Certainly, your name. But—God in heaven, can it be possible? Quick, man, come with me."

Out into the night rushed the two men, one torn by a thousand conflicting emotions. He knew the resolute temper of his sweetheart and fearing she had seen his downfall and had returned in spite of all, he felt a fear tugging at his heart which stilled him. Yet he ran blindly after the doctor until they reached a small house where a dim light could be seen near the open window. Here Dr. Wright halted and cautioned the excited man to exercise care.

"Care! Who should be more tender than I? If it is my love I will nurse her back into life," hoarsely said the young Northerner. "Let me in. Don't you see this suspense is killing me? God, it is she!" and he fell on his knees beside the pallet on which the form of a young woman in the gray garb of the sisters lay extended. His voice roused the sick girl from her stupor. She glanced around the room with frightened eyes and then suddenly started up.

"George," she said feebly, "you here? Oh, go away. You will take the fever and die. Don't stay. Take him away, doctor, for my sake."

"No. Here I stay. Tell me how you came here and what does this dress mean?"

"This dress?" replied Mamie. "Oh, this belonged to a young nun who lost her life out in the camp. I was thrown from the train, dear, and when I came back home my father——" and here the poor, emaciated form writhed in agony.

"Yes, yes."

"It was the law, George. He could not help it. But he turned me back. I saw you fall. I went to this camp, then a fearful place of contagion and terror. I slipped in during the night, when the guard did not see me, and begged for food. The nun had died during the night. I prevailed on Dr. Stefano, who had just come, to permit me to assume the garb. I thought you were dead. I did not care what became of me. They told me you never regained consciousness. I was driven from home by the plague and forced to wander an outcast by my only parent. I wore the garb out there. Then the good doctor came here. Again I succeeded in prevailing on him to take me with him. He said I had helped him out there, why should I not do so in here? Besides, it was home, and I longed for it. I came and worked until this morning. Then I fell ill. Now I'm dying. Yes, dearest, I'm dying. No skill can save me. I have worn the infected clothing too long and was too much broken down when I put them on for any hope of life to remain. We must part now. Oh, the pain of the parting! But, when I am gone, tell my father I forgive him. Yes, it is rest now. Meet me above the stars."

Fainter and fainter the struggling breath came and went. As the day dawned, another day of horror, with its merciless sun to bake and scorch the doomed populace, the gentle spirit took flight. Conscious to the last, in the arms of her despairing lover she sank to her eternal rest with a peaceful smile on her wasted features.—Chicago Chronicle.

WOMEN WORKED LIKE MEN.

Present Day Millionaires Tell of Money Made by Their Wives.

In the early days of the Republic most of the women worked as steadily as the men.

It is true that they did "home work" mostly, but it was hard work none the less, and it helped support the families and earn the slowly accumulating surplus.

In those days the women did the work that is now performed by half a dozen different kinds of factories. They spun the yarn for the stockings that were worn by every member of the family, and knitted them, too, and they did most of the weaving.

Now-a-days even the knitting is done chiefly by machines. Not only was the cloth for the garments of every member of the family manufactured at home by the diligent housewife, but she and her deep-chested, strong-armed daughter wove the carpets besides.

All this "factory work" was done in addition to the "housework," now so generally done by servants; every bit of it was then held to be distinctively "woman's work," and had been so regarded since work first began.

Although this labor was mostly done in doors, the woman never hesitated to help in the harder, outdoor work of the men when called upon, and by all accounts this was pretty often. Farmers' wives and daughters were frequently seen in the fields. They planted and husked the yellow corn, they made hay, they helped in the harvest and they drove teams.

Some of the vast fortunes on which the famous "families" of to-day—whose women marry dukes and princes, and would be scandalized at the thought of any kind of work—are founded, were built up by the help of woman's work. It is said that the wife of the first Vanderbilt toiled as hard as he did.

When he was a young man he was a ferryman between New York and Elizabethport. At first he used a schooner in his business. He commanded the craft, and his wife did the cooking. Sometimes she had her hands full, feeding the passengers and crew; for, although when the wind and the tide were right the trip was easily and quickly made, when they were adverse the passage sometimes occupied days.

Mrs. Vanderbilt was a good cook and a frugal woman, and it was due quite as much to her industry and thrift as her husband's that he was able to discard his sailing vessel when steamboats came in.

But for years after that the passengers were often fed on the boat, and she remained the cook until the Vanderbilt surplus had attained to considerable proportions.

Wheat in Olden Time.

From the time of Alexander the Great down to the time of Columbus, the average price of wheat was $6.72 a ton; from 1751 to 1800 the price averaged four times as much.

A boy who goes to a private school has great contempt for a boy who goes to "the public."

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Appreciation.—Sometimes we fancy we are not appreciated, but who of us is egotistic enough to say it is because we are too good. If so, let us mingle with people, and we will soon find our level.—Rev. C. L. Thompson, Presbyterian, New York City.

Paul.—Paul was a prophet, seer, preacher, orator, dramatist and poet. He was a more intense poet than Browning. Browning is the philosopher among poets; Paul the poet among philosophers.—Rev. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Future of Gotham.—Greater New York must guard her honor, and woe, woe to him who would drag her good name down. Blessed be those, whether high or low, who consider citizens' duty as sacred as any God put upon them.—Rev. G. Gotthell, Hebrew, New York City.

The Poets.—Many of the latter-day poets, like Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes and Lowell, were pronounced Unitarians, as were also many of their contemporaries in the world of science and history and statecraft.—Rev. M. J. Savage, Unitarian, New York City.

Kind Barbarians.—What are we going to do with our white brutal meanness when there is no Indian to lay it on to? The Indian is very convenient. The biggest scoundrels and cowards on earth are white and in full dress.—Rev. M. W. Reed, Independent, Denver, Colo.

Walk with God.—Let us urge upon all professing Christians to walk with God, and so be prepared to meet with him—not to expect translation, because we are promised the presence of Christ in passing through the valley of the shadow of death.—Rev. John Hall, Presbyterian, New York City.

The Control of Satan.—Sin is an awful thing. It always works destruction, brings sorrow and leads to death. The only safe way is for men to dread sin as dangerous, because it strengthens evil habits, and puts the sinner under the control of Satan.—Rev. P. C. Cernick, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Money Power.—Many of the events which have altered the history of the world have had money as the leverage. The money power provoked the war of the Crimea, with all its attendant horrors; the money power provoked our own civil war.—Rev. W. S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York City.

Woman's Tastes.—Woman's nature calls for certain things that man's nature does not call for so loudly. She needs tenderness and love, she is an admirer of the beautiful and the delicate, she ought and must have these yearnings of her nature gratified up to a certain degree, if she is to realize her destiny. Did you ever know a man to be desperately in love with a masculine woman? We want woman to be womanly, and if she is to be this she must not be denied those yearnings of her heart which constitute so large a part of her woman's happiness.—Rev. G. B. Vosburgh, Baptist, Denver, Colo.

War Against Liquor.—Death to the liquor traffic! Let that passionate purpose possess every Christian's breast. In the name of God, in the name of our home and in the name of and for the sake of our native land, let our cry be, "Death to the liquor traffic!"—Rev. P. Milburn, Methodist, Washington, D. C.

The Revelation of God.—The Universalist church does not say that you shall or shall not accept any or all that is contained in the Bible. It simply stands for the revelation of God, which is contained in the Bible, and for the truth as there laid down for human guidance.—Rev. C. H. Eaton, Universalist, New York City.

The Liberal Church.—People will not seek new religious fields when their wants are being met in the churches with which they have been long affiliated. The liberal church has served its purpose, its usefulness is gone, and in the natural order of things it must die out.—Rev. Col. Duncan, Salvationist, Chicago, Ill.

Short Lesson in Palmistry.

The girdle of Venus, indicated by a heavy line in the accompanying sketch of a hand, extends from a point between the first and second fingers to a point between the third and last fingers. It curves downward toward the wrist, often crossing the line of the heart or being united therewith. The girdle of Venus is a good sign in a good hand and a bad sign in a bad hand. It always shows its possessor to have great love and affectiin for the opposite sex. Those individuals in whose hands the girdle of Venus is clearly marked should guard themselves carefully to avoid trouble. Adventuresses usually have this line well developed, and no doubt Cleopatra's hand would have shown such a line even to the casual observer. Accompanied by a good thumb, a strong line of the head and a good life line, the girdle of Venus and its characteristics are desirable. But when the hand is weak the girdle is dangerous. When it is absent it indicates a person who has little feeling, especially if the line of the heart be weak.

The Minister's Salary.

Deacon Skinflint—We've failed again this year, Mr. Dominie. Can't raise half your salary.

Good minister—No matter. I have had myself appointed a missionary to the heathen, and will soon be in the pay of the Board of Missions.

Deacon Skinflint—Air ye goin' to Africa?

Good minister—No; I shall stay right here.—New York Weekly.

WOMEN MARTYRS.

Lots of women suffer constantly, and seldom utter complaint.

Our habits of life and dress tell sadly upon women's delicate organizations. They ought to be told just where the danger lies, for their whole future may depend upon that knowledge and how to overcome the dangers that threaten them.

There is no need of our describing the experience of such women here—they are too well known by those who have suffered; but we will impress upon every one that these are the never-failing symptoms of serious womb trouble, and unless relieved at once a life will be forfeited.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound never fails to relieve the distressing troubles above referred to; it has held the faith of the women of America for twenty years.

It gives tone to the womb, strengthens the muscles, banishes backache and relieves all pains incident to women's diseases. All Druggists sell it and recommend it.

NO USE FOR SORROWFUL SONG.

Oh, what is the use of a sorrowful song?
The world knows enough of sadness.
Cares press wearily, troubles throng,
Toil is bitter and grief is long,
And never is too much gladness.

Oh, what is the use of a sorrowful song,
When we might sing one of thanksgiving
That never a soul is too deep in wrong,
Though years are heavy and sin is strong,
To climb to truest living!

Oh, what is the use of a sorrowful strain
That brings but tears and grieving!
There's never a life so full of pain
But hope in some corner may bud again,
And bloom into sweet believing.

Oh, what is the use of a sorrowful song
That eases not one heart's aching!
The hearts that are happiest pass it along,
For mirth is heedless and joy is strong;
But it bides in the heart that is breaking.

JERRY'S CHOICE

"Now, see here, Jerry," exclaimed Farmer Johnson to his man of all work, "ye needn't git oneasy jest because old Podgers hez offered ye a dollar a mouth more'n I'm payin' ye. I reckon I've got about ez much money an' kin afford to pay ye about ez much ez Podgers kin or mebbe a little more.

"Ye'r' a fust-class worker, Jerry, I'll admit that, an' I don't want ye to be gittin' dissatisfied or thinkin' of diggin' out, so I'll make a bargain with ye right now before we go any further. If ye stick to me an' work ez well ez ye've bin workin' right along fer the next two years, I'll pay ye the same as Pod-

"WHAT D'YE SAY TO THAT, JERRY?"

gers offered ye, an 'at the end of the two years I'll give ye the best critter on the place. Yes, sirree, Jerry, ye kin take yer pick of any critter on the hull place, from a sheep up to a horse, or even a giraffe or elephant, if I happen to have one of 'em on hand when it comes time to take yer choice.

"What d'ye say to that, Jerry? Is it a bargain?"

"I'll do it," answered Jerry Brant, quietly, "and there's my hand to bind the bargain."

No further mention was made of the bargain between Jerry and his employer until they were seated at the dinner table, later in the day, and then Mr. Johnson, with a merry twinkle in his eyes, glanced across the table at his better fraction, and said:

"Well, mother, I had to discharge Jerry an' hire him over agin to-day."

"You seem to be in very good humor about it, so I judge the difference couldn't have been very serious," commented Mrs. Johnson, who used to be a Yankee schoolma'am before she married and therefore didn't handle the U. S. dialect with the off-hand familiarity of her husband.

"Serious? Ye kin bet it is," ejaculated Mr. Johnson. "Why, I've got to pay him $1 a month more'n I did before, an' at the end of two years, if he stays right along, he's to have his pick out of the critters on the place to take along with him and keep for his own. I expect he'll take a horse, but I can't help it. I wasn't goin' ter let old Podgers hire him away from me, an' then go around chucklin' over it behind my back for the next six months."

"Mr. Podgers made an attempt to hire him, did he?"

"Yes, an' a purty nervy attempt at that. Offered him $1 more a month, but I settled the matter in a hurry by pilin' the best critter on the place on top of that. But if he stays the hull two years I reckon he'll earn it—eh, Jerry?"

Jerry blushed, and answered that he would do his best.

"Didn't you exempt my pony, papa? I really can't think of allowing Mr. Brant to run off with that, even if he does earn it," exclaimed Farmer Johnson's pretty 18-year-old daughter, May, with a sidelong glance of admiration at Jerry's broad shoulders and manly features.

"O, Jerry wouldn't be mean enough to take the pony, I guess," interposed her father.

"No," said Jerry, "I don't want the pony—unless the rider goes with it," he added, sotto voce.

"Eh, what's that?" demanded Mr. Johnson. "Unless what? I didn't ketch the tail end of that remark, exactly."

Jerry's face turned crimson, and he was about to repeat the remark, when the quick-witted young lady came to the rescue.

"Mr. Brant"—she always called him by that title, because she considered it more becoming and dignified than Jerry—"Mr. Brant says he doesn't want the pony unless the bridle goes with it, I believe," she explained, ingeniously.

"Hugh! I reckon a halter is all he'll get with her if takes that pony. There wa'n't anything in the writin's about throwin' in a bridle," said Farmer Johnson.

"You needn't worry, father. I think Mr. Brant will be generous enough to spare me my pony," said May, reassuringly.

"Yes, you may keep your pony," agreed Jerry, with an undisguised glance of admiration at the pretty face opposite him.

May's eyes fell before his, but not until they had flashed back a look that caused his heart to beat high with hope.

The fact of the matter was that stalwart, good-looking Jerry had long admired his employer's handsome and accomplished daughter, but to-day was the first time he had dared to let her know it, either by look or speech.

After that, however, their acquaintance rapidly ripened, and a few weeks later Jerry surprised Mr. Johnson by asking for the hand of his daughter in marriage.

Mr. Johnson was engaged in the pastoral occupation of milking a cow at the moment this question was sprung upon him, and he nearly fell off the stool in astonishment.

"Want to marry my darter, May?" he gasped. "I guess not, young man! Not if the court knows itself. I've bin edyercatin' her fer suthin' higher than marryin' her father's hired man."

"O, if that is the only objection, it can easily be removed," interposed Jerry; "I don't expect to remain anybody's hired man after my two years are up. I believe I told you when I came here that I had just graduated from college, and intended to make the pursuit of agriculture my life business, instead of going into medicine or law, or any other of the already over-crowded professions. I believe a man with brains can put them to as good use in farming as in anything else, and I propose to prove it.

"I am studying the practical side of the business now, and at the end of my two years I propose to go West and buy a ranch and strike out for myself. As far as my education is concerned, I don't think I shall ever give your daughter occasion to be ashamed of me, and as to supporting her comfortably and in becoming style, I believe I shall be abundantly able to do so, and——"

"Can't help that, Jerry!" broke in Mr. Johnson. "I hain't gointer have ye luggin' May off jest because ye two young folks imagine ye'r in love. A woman is a mighty queer an' onsartin sort of critter, anyhow, as ye'll find out soon enough when ye get hooked up in double harness fer life with one of 'em, an' if I was in your place I wouldn't be in any hurry 'bout takin' a yoke of that kind on my shoulders."

"Anyhow, if ye insist on gettin' married in spite of my warnin' ye'll hafter pick out some other partner besides the one ye've got yer eyes sot on at present. My darter is goin' back to college next week to finish up her edyercation, an' when she gets through her schoolin' it will be plenty time enough fer her to commence thinkin' 'bout the men. She'll forgit ye by that time fast enough, so ye might as well give up all hope right now of ever gittin' her.

"I like ye well enough other ways, Jerry, but I don't care fer ye in the role of a son-in-law. There, now, ye've got yer answer fair and square, and if ye want to stay an' work out the balance of yer time, we'll drop the love bizness right here, an' I'll treat ye as well as ever; but if ye don't care to stay under the circumstances it is all right, an' I shan't blame ye any fer goin'. Now, which is it to be, Jerry, stay or quit?"

"I'll stay," said Jerry, quietly.

And stay he did, performing his duties as conscientiously and thoroughly as ever, although the farm life suddenly grew sordid and dull when May went back to her college studies.

The months rolled swiftly round, however, as months have a habit of doing, until eighteen of them had been crossed off the calendar of time. Then May, as bright and winsome as of old, came home with her dimples and diploma, and though he did not even dare to look his admiration, Jerry was straightway transported to paradise.

Jerry's term of service finally expired, and he regretfully announced that the time had come for him to strike out in life for himself.

"That's so, Jerry," said Farmer Johnson. "I had clean forgot 'bout yer two years bein' up to-day. Waal, I'll look over accounts an' settle up with ye after dinner, an' in the meantime ye kin be lookin' round an' sorter makin' up yer mind which one of the critters on the place ye want. I believe ye was ter take yer choice when ye quit."

"Well," said Jerry promptly, "it won't take me long to make up my mind."

Here he stepped quickly across the room to where May was gazing disconsolately from the window and whispered a question in her ear. For an instant her eyes met his, then she rose with a smile, placed her hand confidingly in his and together they faced her father.

"THIS IS THE ONE I WANT."

"This is my first and only choice," exclaimed Jerry, with a ring of mingled pride and triumph in his tones.

"But ye can't do that—tain't in the agreement. I said critter, not wimmen folks, an' I hain't gointer allow no such——"

"Just a moment, if you please, Mr. Johnson," interrupted Jerry Brant, drawing himself erect, with proudly flashing eyes, and still retaining May's hand. "Haven't I heard you allude to the women as queer critters, consarned critters, plaguey critters, and I don't know how many other kinds of critters during the past two years and upwards that I have been with you?"

"Yes, I s'pose ye have," acknowledged Mr. Johnson, "but—er——"

"All right, sir," interposed Jerry, briskly. You promised me the best critter on the place, and this is the one I want—and the only one."

Farmer Johnson gazed at the handsome and smiling young couple before him, in a half-indignant, half-indulgent sort of way for a moment, and then the latter feeling got the better of the struggle, and he quietly remarked:

"Waal, a bargain is a bargain, an' I s'pose I'll hafter keep my word; but I say, young man"—and Mr. Johnson's eyes twinkled mischievously—"don't ye think ye sorter missed yer vocation, not bein' a lawyer instead of a farmer?"—Utica Globe.

HE COULD KICK.

A Mule that Would Be Very Unpopular on the Avenue.

At rare intervals along the mountain roads of West Virginia and Kentucky the traveler may come upon a blacksmith shop, but he is much safer in the shoeing of his horse if he will carry a few nails and tools in the bottom of his buggy. On a trip by Round Gap on one occasion I found a blacksmith shop at the forks of the road, and, as usual, a half dozen or more men sitting around it in the shade. My turnout needed some repairs and as the smith was pottering about it inside, I made talk with the men outside. One of them wanted to sell me a mule which he had hung up on the fence and I started in for a dicker. After we had been talking for perhaps a quarter of an hour, the smith asked me to step inside and show him something about the work he was doing. As soon as he got me away from the crowd he came close and grew confidential.

"Y'ain't thinkin' uv buyin' that critter, air you?" he asked in all sincerity.

"Well, I don't know. I want a mule and that one looks all right," I said.

"You can't tell a mule by his looks, mister. Mules is fer all the world like women.

"What's the matter with him?" I inquired, quite ignoring the comparison.

"He ain't safe. Course I ain't got nothin' ag'in' the mule ner the owner and I'd be glad enough fer him to git the money fer him, fer he owes me fer the shoein' uv him, but I don't like ter see a stranger tuck in an' done up like he's tryin' to do you."

"But you haven't told me what's the matter with the mule," I insisted. "Will he kick?"

"That's his weakness, mister," responded the smith, letting his voice fall to a whisper. "You won't believe me, p'raps, but I'm tellin' you he's the kickin'est critter in the mountains. He shore is, mister, and I hope I may die right here, ef he can't kick the sody outen a biscuit, an' never crack the crust. He kin, mister, er I'm a brother to him."

A Rainbow in the Moonlight.

The great lunar rainbow seen from the houses on the cliffs at Nahant and along Marginal road on the night of a recent great storm was, on the word of an astronomer, a most unusual, as it was a most splendid and impressive, sight. Halo rainbows about Lady Lunar or bits of rainbow on "the little clouds sailing around the moon" are not uncommon, but a full bow spanning the heavens is not often seen by night. It needs a full and brilliant moon and a small shower. The one which hung in the heavens above Swampscott and Beach Bluff showed with peculiar radiance across the water to the people at Nahant whose backs were to the big bright moon that came out of her flying storm clouds long enough to show a quarter hour of the phenomenon. The red and blue in the great bow were fairly pronounced, the orange was fainter and it required help from the imagination to distinguish any of the other four prismatic colors before the rainbow began to fade. Then the most distant right end of it glowed with increasing yet "ineffectual fires." If a "rainbow at night is the sailor's delight," 'tis surely the solar bow which is so often seen before sunset. The astronomer who has never seen but one full arching moonbow in his observant career notes that the chances are few indeed for mortals to observe this glory of the Lady Luna. In the first place, there must be a full moon, and there are only about thirty-six chances in a year, a tenth of the chances to see a solar rainbow, and these may be quartered by the fact that most people are not up all night, as they are all day. If there were quite as many moonbows as sunbows proportionately—and this is improbable—we have only one-fortieth as much opportunity to observe them.—Boston Evening Transcript.

A Woman Mint Farmer.

A woman living in Louisiana is supporting herself comfortably on the proceeds of a farm on which she raises nothing but mint. All the principal hotels and restaurants in New Orleans purchase their mint from her, and she makes enough during the summer months, when juleps and other cooling drinks containing mint are in demand, to enable her to live comfortably through the winter.

When Salmon Were High.

On June 12, 1775, upward of 2,400 salmon were taken above the bridge in the River Tyne, and sold in Newcastle at 1d and 1½d per pound.

DEER IN ABUNDANCE.

THE WISCONSIN AND MICHIGAN WOODS FULL OF THEM.

Exceptional Number of Animals Observed in Hunting Grounds—Methods of the Skilled Woodman in Approaching His Antlered Game.

How They Are Hunted.

Within a night's ride of Chicago deer and bear may be found in good numbers. Yet a little further into the wilderness such an abundance of deer has not been seen for many years. In the wilds of Wisconsin and throughout Northern Michigan deer are so plentiful that the "still" hunters have had no trouble in "walking up" game in any likely piece of woods.

Wisconsin always has been a good deer country. Food is abundant, the wods are large and there is just such a variety of country as the deer loves for a habitation. He can wander over hills, through thick swamps or open woods, and all around is silence save what noise is made by the chirping birds and wild creatures like himself. He loves to feed a little on the lowlands and then browse on the high ground. It takes him a long time to make a meal, and no matter how much of good food there may be in any particular place he will not remain there to thoroughly satisfy his appetite. He must roam about and eat over a great deal of territory. When he has browsed and fed till he is content he loves to pose behind a clump of bushes and watch and listen. At such times he stands with head up as stanch as a setter on point, and if one watches him closely not a movement of his muscles will be detected. He sweeps the country before him with his keen eyes, and his sharp ears will be disturbed by the breaking of a twig anywhere within gunshot.

When the day is still the deer is confident he can outwit the enemy who tries to creep up on him with shotgun or rifle. But when the wind blows he fears to trust himself in those places where he may easily be approached by man, so he hides in the thickets and remains very quiet until night. To kill a deer on a still day when he is not difficult to find the hunter must match the deer in cunning and must possess a marked degree of patience. The deer, conscious of his own craftiness, wanders slowly through the woods, but he does not go far before he stops, and like a statue he stands and can only be made out by the hunter with a knowledge of his ways and a trained eye.

The deer listens for a footfall. Should the hunter be anywhere within the range of his ear and step on a twig, the deer is off with a bound. He does not stop until he has reached what he regards as a safe locality in which to look and listen again. A man moving cautiously behind a clump of bushes anywhere within the sweep of his vision will start him off on the run, for he is seldom willing to take even a small chance against man. Should the coast be clear the deer will break his pose, browse and wander about again and finally make his bed under the top of a fallen tree or in some little thicket.

To capture the deer by the still-hunting method the hunter must know his ways and outwit him at his own game. First of all the still hunter wears soft shoes and when he puts his foot on the ground he is careful not to set it on a twig which will snap and frighten any deer that may be in the vicinity. The still hunter proceeds at once to put into practice the very system which the deer has taught him. He strikes a pose. He listens and looks. A deer standing like a statue 200 yards away is not likely to be detected by an inexperienced hunter, but the expert is not deceived. He has learned to look closely into the detail of the picture before him and he will note the difference between a set of antlers and a bush.

The brown sides of a deer are very indistinct when they have for a background a clump of brown bushes. But the expert still hunter sits quietly on a log and peers into the distance steadily, examining all details before him. Occasionally his fancy will help him to make a deer's haunch out of a hump on a tree or he will fancy he sees an antler mixed with the small branches of a bush, but his trained eye finally removes all doubt. But he is in no hurry. He is like the deer, patient, keen of sight and quick of hearing. He knows that if there are any deer on their feet in his vicinity he will get his eyes on them if he takes the time or if he waits long enough he is likely to see them on the move. At all events he must see the deer first. Then he must get near enough to him to bring him down with his rifle.

Still hunting is the popular method in Wisconsin. Hunting with hounds is forbidden by law. Another method used with success is what is called "breasting." Several hunters walk through the woods in line, a good gunshot apart. A similar line is formed in another portion of the woods, and the men in both lines walk toward each other. Whatever deer may be lying down are jumped and the hunters take a chance at getting a snap shot as the deer starts away. If he runs down the line he may get shot or if he goes straight away he may eventually run afoul of the other line of hunters. Half a dozen men hunting in two lines in this way are likely to bag several deer in a morning's hunt.

Several years ago the market hunters played havoc with the deer in the northern woods. They made it a business to hunt in all manner of ways and were so successful that it became necessary to make and enforce laws for the animal's protection. A favorite method of the market hunter was to "shine" deer at night. The deer, moving about feeding, would be attracted by a huge lamp. His curiosity would lead him to come near enough to the light to be reached by the hunter's gun, fired from a convenient ambush.

Hounds drove and harried the deer so much that it was found necessary to prohibit the chasing of deer with dogs. Under the protection of stringent laws the woods have been made to abound with deer.

IN THE WOODS OF NORTHERN WISCONSIN.

Mountain of Diamonds.

Some idea of the wealth of the South African diamond diggings may be formed from the fact that in twenty-six years no less than seventeen tons of those precious stones have been unearthed, aggregating in value $375,000,000; that the yearly output is now about $15,000,000, and that as old fields become less valuable new ones are being discovered, which promise to maintain the product. The profits of three diamond companies run from $7,500,000 to $8,500,000 each, with annual dividends of 40 per cent., and it is owing to the dexterous management of these monopolies that the price of diamonds has not been affected to any noticeable extent.—London Times.

Photographing a Stomach.

An electric lamp and camera have been invented for photographing the interior of the stomach. The invention is intended to assist in diagnosing obscure ailments, such as cancer of the stomach, and render laparotomy unnecessary. A perfect picture of the pyloric mucous membrane is said to have been obtained.

The camera is actually introduced into the stomach and exposed for from five to eight seconds, the light for photographing being supplied by a small incandescent lamp attached to it. No narcotics are required, as there is no pain connected with the operation. In early cases anesthesia was tried, but the movement of the stomach which occurs in deep anesthesia blurred the picture.

When the camera is introduced the patient holds his breath, which he can easily do for the short time of the exposure. By this means the movement of the membrane is prevented. The electric light, which is detachable, may first be introduced in order that an outline of the stomach be made externally on the abdomen, and at the same time the required length of tubing from the teeth of the focal point can be determined. There is a good deal of uncertainty connected with this method of exploring the inner organs of the abdominal section, but if it can be made anything like practicable it will, obviously, be of untold value to the pathologist.

The Reindeer's Warm Coat.

The skin of the reindeer is so impervious to the cold that any one clothed in such a dress, with the addition of a blanket of the same material, may bear the intensest rigors of an Arctic winter's night.

A woman will cheerfully get up at 3 o'clock in the morning for an opportunity to say good-by.

WAS PULLMAN'S MODEL-MAKER.

Job W. Massey Made the Plans of the First Dining Car.

Job W. Massey is a farmer, living about nine miles north of Charleston, Ill. The death of George M. Pullman has brought to light the fact that Mr. Massey was at one time associated with the palace car magnate.

In 1860 Mr. Massey was a model-maker in Chicago. He furnished the "mechanical brains" for men who had bright ideas, but not the skill to execute them. Through the channels of business Massey became acquainted with the manager of the Pullman car mechanical department, a man named Longstreet, and afterward with Pullman himself. His first work with the Pullman people was the devising of a coil spring to lift and hold in place the berths in a sleeper. This was about the time that the construction of the dining car was worrying the railroad people.

One day Massey and Longstreet went to the yards, and Massey sketched a car in the outlines, or skeleton. Then he went to work on the model. It took him the whole summer, and while the work was in progress hundreds of visitors were attracted where the tiny car was being constructed. A rule of the patent office still in force prohibits the offering of a model more than twelve inches in length, but in this instance special permission was obtained from the commissioner to make a model twenty inches long, yet, with this additional advantage, the car was very diminutive, and required the most delicate and intricate work. After three months of patient labor Massey sent his model to Washington. He says it was as pretty a piece of work as any ever submitted to the commissioner of patents. The car was perfect in every respect. The seats, four to each table, were upholstered, the doors were hung with silver-plated hinges, the kitchen, with its range, shelves, sink, cellar, etc., was true to life. Job W. Massey won the prize and George M. Pullman reaped the fruits thereof.

After the fire in 1871 Mr. Massey left Chicago, went to Coles County and engaged in farming. He is a man of fine intellect and polished manners.

An Accommodating Railroad.

"It used to be a standing joke," says the Lewiston (Me.) Journal, "that any obliging conductor on the Bangor and Piscataquis road would stop a train while a passenger got out and dug a mess of greens, and the writer once enjoyed a tarry in Piscataquis woods when the only apparent cause of the stop was to let some summer tourists gather some choice wild flowers that grew beside the track. It seems that the good old customs are still kept up there, as the Bangor paper reports that a train was stopped about half way across Bunker Brook trestle the other day to allow a photographer to get a picture of it, and also to take views of the beautiful scenery around there."

Mustaches Sacrificed for Safety.

Men exposed to the rigors of the Alaska winter never wear mustaches. They wear full beards to protect the throat and face, but keep the upper lip clean shaven. The moisture from the breath congeals so quickly that a mustache becomes imbedded in a solid cake of ice and the face is frozen before a man knows it.

What has become of the old fashioned man who sometimes wore two pairs of spectacles on his nose?

Husband—"Maria, wake up quick! The house is on fire. You save the baby!" Wife—"Oh, my wheel, my wheel!" Husband—"Come on, I carried that out first."—Rochester Herald.

First Mother—"Don't you find it a great relief to have the children in school again?" Second Mother—"Well, it would be if they didn't learn so many new questions to ask."—Tit-Bits.

Jean—"Why do you never speak to Mr. Outre? He is uncouth, but I feel sure he is a diamond in the rough." Katherine—"So do I. That's why I'm cutting him."—Cincinnati Commercial.

Good Friend.—"I have reason to suspect that your husband is flirting with other women. You ought to follow him wherever he goes." "Great heavens! My husband is a postman."—Fliegende Blatter.

The Wise Proprietor.—Guest (in cheap restaurant)—"Here, waiter! this meal is simply vile. I won't pay for it. Where's the proprietor?" Waiter—"He's out at lunch, sir."—Philadelphia Record.

Kate—"He seems extremely devoted. He talks of going to the Klondike for my sake." Beatrice—"Well, that would give you two chances. He might come back with a fortune or he might not come back at all."—Puck.

Cruel.—Naomi—"He's a mean, insulting thing." Stella—"Why?" Naomi—"I told him I didn't know whether to go to the opera or the play, and he said I was old enough to choose for myself."—Philadelphia American.

Mr. Wiggles—"The true facts of the case were that——" Mrs. Wiggles (interrupting)—"Joshua, did you ever know any facts that weren't true?" And she never heard the rest of that story.—Somerville Journal.

How He Loved Them.—Mrs. Merry—"I never saw a boy so fond of pets as Bobby is." Mrs. Wallace—"Really?" Mrs. Merry—"Yes; he's worn out a kitten and two pups in the last two months."—Golden Days.

"Majah, did yo' read of theih discovu'in the bones of a mastodon down in the old State t'othah day?" "I did, Cunnel, I did, thank yo'. What bobby cues they must have had in those days, sah!"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Sue Brette—"I never saw such a cold audience in my life." Foote Light—"Didn't they warm up a bit?" "Well, when they spoke of bringing out the author, I believe some of the audience got hot."—Yonkers Statesman.

THE FULLNESS THEREOF.

Among the discomforts of life and the fullness thereof, reaching to every family, there is that which can so easily mitigate or entirely cure, the wonder is why we endure and suffer so much. From big pains to little aches, which are the wear and tear of the physical structure of man, there are always remedies good, better and best. The choice should always be for best as the surest and the cheapest. In chronic or acute suffering with rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica or lumbago, or with the minor ailments of sprains and bruises, or of soreness and stiffness, the efficacy of St. Jacobs Oil and the fullness thereof in so many complete and perfect cures make it stand out as the best remedy for pain. Why then should we stand on the order of going for it and not go at once? In numberless cases the aggravations of discomforts and pains are from delay. Why should we suffer?

A Dramatic Assassination.

By far the most dramatic royal assassination was that of the Emperor Paul of Russia on March 24, 1801, by his nobles. As usual Paul had retired to rest booted and spurred and in his regimentals. At the dead of night he was awakened by an unusual noise. The hussar who guarded his chamber door—the only faithful sentry, as it proved, in the palace—was being killed by nine nobles. They burst into the room and began to attack the emperor. Paul hid behind chairs and tables and begged for his life. He offered to make each of his assailants a prince. He offered to abdicate in vain. Then he made a wild dash for the window, fearfully gashing himself, but he was dragged back. He seized a chair and for some time kept the nine of them at bay, and only after terrific struggles was he seized and strangled with his own sash.

Parliamentary Humor.

The London World gives this as an illustration of the keen humor of Justice Darling: On one occasion, when Mr. Gladstone was beginning to give up the lead in the house of commons to Sir William Harcourt, it was noticed by the members that he left the house at the dinner hour and Sir William Harcourt led for the rest of the sitting. Mr. Darling one evening drove Sir William to fury, on failing to elicit a definite answer to an inquiry, by casually observing in the course of his speech, "I have noticed that lately the party opposite, adopting an ancient precedent, has set up a greater light to rule the day and a lesser light to rule the night."

He Passed Out.

"I won't submit to being turned away," said the disappointed arrival at the hotel. "See here—I'm flush!" And he displayed a roll of bills.

"I know," responded the clerk, "but I've got a full house."—Philadelphia North American.

A dull, throbbing pain, accompanied by a sense of tenderness and heat low down in the side, with an occasional shooting pain, indicates inflammation.

The region of pain shows some swelling. This is the first stage of ovaritis, inflammation of the ovary. If the roof of your house leaks, my sister, you have it fixed at once; why not pay the same respect to your own body? Write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., and tell her all your symptoms. Her experience in treating female ills is greater than any other living person. The following from Mrs. ANNIE CURTIS, Ticonderoga, N. Y., is proof of what we say:

"For nine years I suffered with female weakness in its worst form. I was in bed nearly a year with congestion of the ovaries. I also suffered with failing of the womb, was very weak, tired all the time, had such headaches as to make me almost wild. Was also troubled with leucorrhœa, and was bloated so badly that some thought I had dropsy. I have taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and several of her Blood Purifier, and am completely cured. It is a wonder to all that I got well."

Terra-cotta sleepers are in use on Japanese railroads. The increased cost is compensated for by the greater resistance to decay.

A slight layer of sand in the saucers under plants prevents them from drying quickly. Plants will be found to thrive better and require less attention in watering.

In the last publication of the Berlin Academy of Sciences Prof. Rontgen has an article in which he confirms the observation of Dr. Brandes that it is possible to make the X-rays visible to the eye.

The new invention for reducing noise of trains on elevated railroads is called iron felt. It is placed between the rails and sleepers and not only deadens sounds and reduces shocks, but materially diminishes the wear and tear.

Cyclists, tourists and others, particularly ladies, are often troubled with dust getting into their eyes, and a transparent vizard or eye-screen has been devised. It consists in a curving frame of steel with a clear pane of mica or gelatine, which can be fixed on the rim of the hat, and being very light, protects the eyes without inconvenience to the wearer.

Col. Young, acting superintendent of the Yellowstone Park, reports that coyotes and black bears have multiplied so rapidly in the park, under the protection afforded them against hunters, that they have become a source of annoyance. He advises that some of the coyotes be killed, and that specimens of the bears be captured and presented to zoological museums.

It has recently been suggested that apparatus designed for saving life at sea should be constructed in part of india rubber receptacles containing calcium carbide. According to an inventor, on immersion in water, acetylene would be instantly given off, and the whole become powerfully buoyant. A similar arrangement might be employed for canoes, rafts and military bridges and pontoons.

Evaporation is proportional to the velocity and dryness of the wind. Scientific experimentation demonstrates that when the temperature of the air is at 80 degrees Fahrenheit, with a relative humidity of 50 per cent., the evaporation, with the wind blowing five miles an hour, is 2.2 greater than at calm; at ten miles, 3.8; at fifteen miles, 4.9; at twenty miles, 5.7; at twenty-five miles, 6.1; at thirty miles, 6.3 times as much as a calm atmosphere of the same temperature and humidity.

Songs that Pass.

Some idea of the importance of a song in making a performer popular may be got from the fact that a young woman who was married the other day in Europe was mentioned for the first time in about five years, although she at one time had a large part of New York singing or whistling "Daddy Wouldn't Buy Me a Bow-Wow." After New York had heard enough of that ballad it bade adieu firmly but gently to the young woman, says the New York Sun, and it soon became evident that beyond the bow-wow there was nothing about her that New York especially cared for.

So she returned to her native shores, and it was not until the news of her marriage came to this country that her existence was again recalled, with the necessary reminder of the song she had sung. The large sums said to be paid to song writers for successful work may be exaggerated, and it is, indeed, certain that none of them out of their first efforts ever grows very rich, and it takes the record of at least one triumph to gain a recognition for them. But some of them are well paid, and from the difficulties of their work appear to deserve it. There is a young girl uptown who sings some verses which make very little impression, and a vain effort has been made to get in place of them something a little more suited to New York taste. Already four writers have tried, but none of them has produced anything better than the present material. The verses have been sung and proved as flat as the others, and in view of the unsuccessful attempts made by well-known men, there will be no further efforts wasted on what seems a hopeless task. It happens that in this particular case the works of the writers have received all the assistance possible from the singer, who has done with the verses as much as anybody could.

Our Smaller Colleges.

"There are a few striking facts about the small American college," writes Edward W. Bok in the Ladies' Home Journal.

"One striking fact is that 60 per cent of the brainiest Americans who have risen to prominence and success are graduates of colleges whose names are scarcely known outside of their own States.

"It is a fact also that during the past ten years the majority of the new and best methods of learning have emanated from the smaller colleges and have been adopted later by the larger ones.

"Because a college happens to be unknown two hundred miles from the place of its location does not always mean that the college is not worthy of wider repute.

"The fact cannot be disputed that the most direct teaching and necessarily the teaching most productive of good results is being done in the smaller American colleges.

"The names of these colleges may not be familiar to the majority of people, but that makes them none the less worthy places of learning. The larger colleges are unquestionably good, but there are smaller colleges just as good and in some respects better. Some of the finest educators we have are attached to the faculties of the smaller institutions of learning. Young girls or young men who are being educated at one of the smaller colleges need never feel that the fact of the college being a small one places them at a disadvantage in comparison with the friend or companion who has been sent to a larger and better known college. It is not the college; it is the student."

HOW A SHARK CAME ABOARD.

British Tramp Wilderspool Comes in from Java with a Fish Story.

When the British tramp steamer Wilderspool, from Java, sugar laden, arrived here yesterday, Capt. Japp had a fish story to tell. Last Sunday night was dark, very dark. In latitude 35.56 N., longitude 70.55 W. the wind was coming in a gale out of the northeast. The seas ran high, and seemed to be getting higher and higher as Capt. Japp stood on the bridge and watched his craft plunge through them heavily. The decks were frequently awash. When Capt. Japp was peering out into the exceeding darkness and keeping himself all ears for any sound that boded ill, he heard now and again as the forward deck was swept by the waves, a flapping and swashing which he thought indicated that some sail had broken loose and was beating about the deck. He ordered the crew forward to take care of it, and when they had gone there their exclamations, which reached his ears through the darkness, brought him down to find out just what had happened.

Flopping about on the deck he saw an eleven-foot shark which the seas had cast there as the steamer plunged and pitched and rolled among them. The fish's great jaws opened and closed as it was thrown by its own struggles and the vessel's motion from point to point of the deck, and the crew, watching attentively these forcible reminders that life is short, executed some admirable quicksteps on the briny boards. One of them stood as if charmed or dazed, unable, apparently, to move a muscle.

"Why don't you take hold of it?" Capt. Japp shouted at this one. "You look as if you were afraid."

The sailorman roused himself, and pulling himself together, made an effort to grab the shark, but he was thrown to the deck. The enormous jaws snapped again and again, and the men fell back loath to help them to a mouthful. Eight of the crew finally set about a siege, and made at the shark in earnest. After a severe battle the shark was beaten and captured, and on the following day it was cut up.—New York Sun.

Income of the College Professor.

To turn to the material side of things, the assurance of a fixed income is a source of permanent satisfaction, however disproportionate the income to the service that is rendered. To be sure, the salary of a full professor, the country over, is little if at all in excess of $2,000. In the larger universities it may rise to $3,000 or something more, but the men who receive above $4,000 are so few as scarcely to affect the general average. Aside from the bare possibility of a call to a richer institution, the college professor is not likely to be earning more at fifty than at thirty. Unlike most other professions, there is here no gradual increase of income, to give tangible evidence of a man's growth in power. Unless one has taken the Northern Farmer's thrifty advice, and "gone where money is" when he married, his outlook as he faces old age is not reassuring. Pensions are extremely rare; college trustees are forced in most cases to be as ungrateful as republics. The cost of living has steadily risen in college towns, keeping pace with the general increase of luxury throughout the older communities. Here and there, particularly in the West, there are exceptions, but upon the whole the scale of necessary expenditure for a man fulfilling the various social duties required by his position is constantly growing greater. The professor's incidental income from books and lectures is ordinarily insignificant. When he has paid his bills he finds no margin left for champagne and terrapin. If he smokes at all, he invents ingenious reasons for preferring a pipe. He sees the light-hearted tutors sail for Europe every summer, but as for himself he decides annually that it will be wiser to wait just one year more. Once in a while he will yield to the temptation to pick up a first edition or a good print, but Aldines and Rembrandt proofs are toys he may not dally with. In short, his tastes are cultivated beyond his income, and his sole comfort is in the Pharisaical reflection that this is better, after all, than to have more income than taste.—Scribner's.

An Ingenious Boy.

A little boy dropped his drumstick into a well, says the London Telegraph. In vain he entreated his parents, the footman, the gardener, the coachman, the cook, the housemaids, to go down into the well to recover his drumstick. In his distress a brilliant experiment occurred to Master Tommy—he secretly carried off all the plate from the sideboard and threw it into the well.

Great was the consternation when the plate was missed, and active search for the robbers took place. In the midst of the alarm and confusion Master Tommy ran with the news that he had found the plate. "Where?" was the cry. "Down the well," replied Tommy. "I saw it quite plain shining on the bottom—spoons, ladles, bread baskets, salvers, and all." The housemaid hurried to the well, at the bottom of which, sure enough, the plate was seen.

A ladder was produced, a servant descended, and the plate was brought up. Just before the last article was fished up Master Tommy whispered to him: "John, please bring up my drumstick when you go down for the soup ladle."

Lightning Rods.

The lightning specialist connected with the Government weather bureau maintains that rods are no protection, and that most precautions taken by people to keep out of the path of a possible electrical discharge are useless.

Professor and layman vie with each other in their commendable efforts to lessen the ills of humanity. Yesterday it was Pasteur and Koch, and today it is Slocum, with a new discovery which is the result of years of careful study and research.

Foremost among the world's greatest chemists stands T. A. Slocum, of New York City. His researches and experiments, patiently carried on for years, have finally culminated in results which are proving as beneficial to humanity as the discoveries of any chemist, ancient or modern. His efforts which for years had been directed toward the discovery of a positive cure for consumption were finally successful, and already his "new scientific system of medicine" has, by its timely use, permanently cured thousands of apparently hopeless cases, and it seems a necessity and humane duty to bring such facts to the attention of all invalids.

The medical profession throughout America and Europe are almost unanimous in the opinion that nearly all physical ailments naturally tend to the generation of consumption. The afflicted die in the short, cold days of winter much faster than the long, hot days of summer.

The Doctor has proved the dreaded disease to be curable beyond a doubt, in any climate, and has on file in his American and European laboratories thousands of letters of heartfelt gratitude from those benefitted or cured in all parts of the world.

No one having, or threatened with, any disease, should hesitate a day, but should write at once. Facts prove that the Doctor has discovered a reliable and absolute cure for Consumption (Tuberculosis) and all bronchial, throat, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections scrofula, general decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all wasting conditions, and to demonstrate its wonderful merits, he will send Three Free Bottles (all different) of his New Discoveries, with full instructions, to any reader of this paper.

Simply write to T. A. Slocum, M. C., 98 Pine street, New York, giving full address.

There is no charge for correspondence-advice—strictly professional and confidential.

Knowing as we do, of the undoubted efficacy of The Slocum System of Medicine, we urge every sufferer to take advantage of this most liberal proposition.

A system of medical treatment that will cure catarrh, lung troubles and consumption is certainly good for—and will cure—any wasting disease that humanity is heir to.

Please tell the Doctor, when writing, that you read his generous offer in our paper.

FIVE REMARKABLE TREES.

Which Rank Among the Curiosities of Plant Life.

The whistling tree, or Acacia fistula, is found in Nubia and the Sudan. The Arabs call it soffar, or piper, because of the whistling sound that it produces, and the specific name of fistula, a word also meaning pipe or flute, has been given it for the same reason.

Insects infest the tree and deposit their eggs in its shoots. A gall-like excrescence about an inch and a half in diameter is produced at the base of the shoots, and when the larvæ have emerged from circular holes in the sides of the shoots the holes, played upon by the wind, produce a whistling sound equal to that produced by a sweet toned flute.

The cow tree is so called because it yields an abundant supply of milk. To obtain the milk deep incisions are made in the tree, from which the fluid flows into vessels placed ready to receive it. This vegetable milk is white, somewhat viscid and has an agreeable flavor, and an analysis of it shows that it is very much like the milk of a cow in its composition. The cow tree grows on the slope of the mountain chain bordering on Venezuela.

The cloth tree is found at Otaheite, in the south sea. The bark is taken off in long strips and put to soak overnight in running water. The soaking softens it, so that the inner fiber may be easily separated from the rest of the bark. The fibers are put together in lengths of about 11 or 12 yards, and the lengths are placed side by side until they are at least 12 inches in width, and two or three layers of fibers are put one upon another.

The fibers adhere together in one piece, and the material thus formed is beaten upon a smooth piece of wood until it becomes as thin as muslin. It is then bleached in the air for a time, when it is ready to be made up into clothing.

The stinging tree of Queensland is pleasing to the eye, but dangerous to the touch. Its effects are curious. It causes great pain to the person or animal that has the misfortune to get stung by it, but it leaves no wound, no mark of any kind, and for months afterward the part stung is painful in rainy weather or when in any way it gets wet. Frequently it is necessary to shoot horses and dogs that have been stung by the tree, so maddening is its effect upon them.

The angry tree grows in Nevada, eastern California and Arizona. When in the least disturbed, this highly sensitive tree shows its anger by ruffling up its leaves and emitting a disagreeable odor.—D. V. F. in Philadelphia Times.

Pointed.

"Isn't your father of rather a retiring disposition?" asked the young man caller whose chief weakness is to stay late.

"Yes," she answered demurely, "he retires at 10 and insists that the house be closed within half an hour of that time."—Detroit Free Press.

A Freeze.

"I don't quite catch the drift of your remarks," said the girl who willfully misunderstood.

"I think I do of yours," said the young man who had been trying to propose. "It is something in the nature of a snowdrift."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A HINT TO ARTISTS.

One Way of Putting Rejected Exhibits to Good Use.

They were riding on the Fourteenth street cars and their conversation was edifying. The man with the long hair was evidently a sculptor, and his companion, a large, jolly looking fellow, was trying to persuade him to present a work of art to some society woman who had a mania for collecting bric-a-brac and articles of vertu.

"I told her that you would, I thought, in time present her with some memento, a statuette illustrating your peculiar style. Was I wrong in saying so?"

The sculptor answered indignantly: "I know her value of art, and I tell you she cannot distinguish between manufactured trinkets and works of art. In fact, she thinks all artists are manufacturers and can turn out statuettes as easily as the rich stove ornament man who gave her a nickel plated mule. Then, too, a brass fixture artist gave her something from the brass foundry, and she thought it great. Never, in my judgment, could she appreciate a true work of art."

"Then you refuse to give her a sample of your work? Remember, she has great influence."

"I do not refuse. I'll give her that model in plaster of paris which was refused by the committee last month. She will think it great, whether or not the committee did."

"Good! She will think it magnificent and get you an order."—New York Commercial.

Of Honest Parents.

"My opponent," shouted the orator, "has seen fit to refer to the fact that my mother took in washing. She did, and what is more to the point she always sent it back."

After that there was nothing to do but cast a majority vote for the man whose parent showed such evidence of perfect honesty and attention to duty.—Indianapolis Journal.

TREMENDOUS EXODUS TO THE KLONDIKE.

Despite the warnings of those who have been on the spot, and predict suffering in the Klondike region, thousands of adventurous Americans are wending their way thitherward. All of them should be provided with that medicinal safeguard, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which warms and nourishes the system, and prevents malaria, rheumatism, kidney trouble, besides remedying liver complaints, dyspepsia and constipation.

U. S. Weather Bureau.

The chief of the Weather Bureau has decided to reopen a branch office of the Bureau at this place, principally on account of its geographical position and secondarily for the benefit of the people in the vicinity. The data collected here will be of great value to the forecast official of the district, and it will be the fault of the people if the services of the local branch are not utilized to the fullest extent. The intention is to fully equip this station with the latest improved self-recording instruments, thus making it a first-class station, as soon as the appropriations for 1898-9 are available.

The daily forecasts will eventually be distributed to all the contiguous settlements, and all citizens who make a request in person or in writing will be supplied. Special studies will be made to prevent the damages occurring through early and late frosts. In whatever way the data collectected can be made useful to the general public the observer in charge will faithfully carry out.

The co-operation of all citizens interested in making this branch of the public service of the greatest use to the greatest number is requested.

NEWSY NOTES FROM BIG PINE.

BIG PINE, Feb. 16, 1898.

ED. INDEPENDENT:—The fine weather of the last few days has given an impetus to the opening spring work among the ranchers, and ditch fixing is well under way.

Preparations indicate a large acreage of spring crops.

Some new faces are seen on the street of the hamlet.

The new buildings in the McConnel addition are all nearly completed.

The proprietors of the Montezuma mine have just completed some development work which has demonstrated the presence of large bodies of galena, and they are convinced that, with a proper reduction plant, the mine will join the list of producers.

The delivery of pine wood at Alvord goes merrily on. The schooner "Betsy Jane" makes daily trips with from twelve to fourteen cords per load.

St. Valentine's day was duly celebrated here on Monday eve by the Epworth League. Lots of fun and some revenue for the benefit of the league.

Our people will "hop" on the night of the 22d in memory of "Truthful George," but will do themselves honor by attending the Grand Ball at Bishop on the eve of the 21st given by John A. Logan Post, G. A. R. Anent this hop—a word to those further down the line. The G. A. R. is certainly an institution of the country. Owing to the immensity of the distance between veterans it is impossible to have frequent meetings of the Post. As a class they are not of the Rothchild brand of accumulators of wealth; last, but not least in the links of this idea, the times are woefully out of joint. Now, in view of the suggestions of these hints, let the situation appeal to your patriotism, and if the demon of poverty don't hold you down to rights, come up and give the old boys a lift, remembering that when the call to arms came, they got there and stayed there until the final recall was sounded. Come and witness the glowing gratitude of the old vets at your token of appreciation. They will agree in advance to give you value received, on penalty of going to the guard-house with their commisary cut off until Memorial Day.

The Ladies' Aid Society is a little anxious to let the good people of the capital know that on March 17 they will give an entertainment in the new church, and will then and there offer for sale various articles of domestic use, besides things belonging in the list of fancy goods, the proceds to be devoted to the completion of the church.

Did She Ever Rive in Boston?

A young lady visited one of our local stores this week who wanted something to keep her stockings up, and thus addressed the terror-stricken clerk:

A long telegram reached Adjt.-General Breck at Washington a few days since from Capt. Robinson the army quartermaster at Seattle, giving the substance of he reports of Capt. Ray, the army officer sent to the Klondike to ascertain the conditions there. He recommends that the Goverment take steps to effectually check the immigration to the interior of Alaska for at least two years. He gives as a reason for this recommendation that there is no way to earn a living. Capt. Ray says there is no employment for any large number of persons in any capacity, all values being speculative. He thinks that about 7 per cent of the people who have entered the gold fields have earned their living, and hundreds are now scattered along the Yukon river destitute o food, clothing and money.

Order of Adjudication of Insolvency.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE COUNTY OF INYO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

In the matter of Frank Philleisser, an insolvent debtor.

Frank Philleisser, having filed in this Court his petition, schedule and inventory in insolvency, by which it appears that he is an insolvent debtor, the said Frank Philleisser is hereby declared to be an insolvent debtor. The Sheriff of the county of Inyo, is hereby directed to take possession of all the estate, real and personal of the said Frank Philleisser, debtor, except such as may be by law exempt from execution, and all of his deeds, vouchers, books of account and papers, and to keep the same safely until the appointment of an assignee of his estate. All persons are forbidden to pay any debts to said insolvent, or to deliver any property belonging to him, or to any person, firm or corporation or association for his use. The said debtor is hereby forbidden to transfer or deliver any property until the further order of this court, except as herein ordered.

It is further ordered that all the creditors of said debtor be and appear before the Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge of the Superior Court, in and for the County of Inyo, State of California, in open court at the court room of said court, in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California, on Friday, the 25th day of February, 1898, at 10 o'clock a.m. of that day, to prove their debts and choose an assignee of the estate of said debtor.

And it is further ordered that this order be published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper of general circulation published in the county of Inyo, State of California, as often as the said paper is published before the day set for the meeting of creditors.

And it is further ordered that, in the mean time, all proceedings against said insolvent be stayed.

WALTER A. LAMAR,
Judge of the Superior Court.

LOVE YOU.

She climbed upon my willing knee
And softly whispered unto me
"I love you."

Her dainty arms were round my neck;
Her sunny curls were in my face;
And in her tender eyes I saw
The soul of innocence and grace.

And like a sunbeam gliding through
The clouds that hide the skies of blue,
Her smile found access to my heart
And bade the shadows all depart.

O, moment of apocalypse,
In which I saw the stately ships,
That erstwhile sailed away from me,
Come riding back across the sea;
I would you might return and stay
Within my lonely heart alway.

God bless the darling little child
Who looked up in my face and smiled,
And wrought into my heart a spell
More sweet than songs of Israel

O, angels, listen while I pray
That you will make her life as sweet
As that brief moment was to me,
Whene'er I heard her lips repeat,
"I love you."

THE CHAPLAIN'S STORY.

JIM BOURN and I were boys together at Westminster; we went to Oxford together to Balliol; we took our degrees together in the Classical (Honors) School, and were ordained together by the Bishop of L——, as curates for his diocese. Here our paths separated for some years, and when next we renewed our old friendship I was the vicar of the town, still single at 34, and Jim was the chaplain of the famous jail in the same town, and married.

We were talking in my study, as in olden times. Somehow the conversation drifted to the subject of a recent newspaper article: "Ought Married People to Have Any Secrets from Each Other?" I said "No," Jim said "Yes." We both smilingly stuck to our text. It was not often that we differed in opinion, but this was one case, anyhow.

"Why, Jim," said I, "you would have been the last person I should have expected to take that line, for I am sure, from what I have seen, that if ever two folks were happy and loving, they are Ella and yourself. I can't conceive of your having any secret which you would not wish Ella to know."

"Ah," retorted he, with a peculiar smile, "that's just it. Well, Howson, I'll tell you one, if you like, though," he added, "it must remain a secret between us two. I have never spoken of it to any one in the world, and never shall, except to yourself."

"Thanks, Jim, you need not fear me, as you know. I am only curious to know the case," and I assumed an attitude of eager attention to Jim's story.

"I was the chaplain at Lowmarket, as you are well aware, before I came here. It is a pretty place, and one wonders whatever made the government build a jail there. However, there it is, and there was I. The amount of society that one got in Lowmarket was perfectly astonishing. Had I had the time and inclination for it, I might have turned out a regular 'society' clergyman. As it was, I had a full amount of lectures, soirees, parties and entertainments. Among the people I got in with none were nicer than the Yorks. Miss York, a maiden lady of 50, lived in a large and beautifully furnished house called 'The Cedars,' in the best part of the town. She was known all over the district for her charity, kindness of heart and pure life. Everybody had a good word for her. Nor was her niece, Miss York, any less popular. People in Lowmarket fairly worshipped both of them.

"I was 28 when I first saw Ella York, and at once succumbed to her charms. For weeks her praises had been in my ears, and now, on acquaintance, I found her beauty, her manners, her kindness of heart, not one whit less than report stated. I loved her. Of course, I could not say so at once; and whether, after two or three meetings in the course of my work—for Miss York the elder took great interest in our sphere of labor—she guessed my love, and reciprocated it, I could not then say. I found, upon judicious inquiries, that Miss York—Ella—had lived with her aunt from childhood; that she was now 24; that her mother was dead, and her father lived on the Continent for his health; also that she was her aunt's sole heiress. These facts were of course only learned by degrees, as one cannot go to the fountain head for such information.

"After much heart-searching and debating within myself I thought I saw that Ella York was not wholly indifferent to me, and I resolved to ask her to be my wife. I need not go into details as to how I did it, beyond saying that it was one summer morning rather more than five years ago, when, having gone to see her aunt, who was out, I met Ella in the grounds; and after talking as we walked along on various subjects, somehow it came out unexpectedly, and almost before I could comprehend what it all meant, Ella York had promised to be my wife, subject to her aunt's consent.

"But her aunt didn't consent. I received a dainty note that night—how tenderly I regarded it, Howson!—from Ella, saying that she had spoken of my visit to her aunt, and had told her I was coming to-morrow for her approval. Miss York had been very kind, but acted rather strangely, and said she would see me, but she could not consent, as she did not wish to lose Ella. My dear girl went on to say that she had in vain tried to get from her any more than this.

"I was in a curious frame of mind as I went next morning to see Miss York.

"I was destined to know her objection. As I approached the lodge the porteress met me.

"'Oh, Mr. Bourn, this is shocking!'

"I was more puzzled than ever! Why my engagement to Ella should be 'shocking' I couldn't see, and I no doubt expressed it in my looks.

"'So sudden, too, sir!' said the woman. 'Nobody expected it!'

"'Whatever's the matter?' said I.

"'Why, haven't you heard that Miss York is dead? No! Oh, dear! Poor think; had a fit in the night, doctor says; was quite unconscious when Miss Ella got there, and died at 9 o'clock this morning.'

"My heart sank; I felt faint and giddy. It was some minutes before I could move. You will never know how it feels, Howson, unless you should have such a blow, which I hope you never will. But I am bound to say that my one thought was 'My poor, lonely darling, Ella!'

"There were no more details to be learned about Miss York's death. She was buried in Lowmarket churchyard. Ella was ill for weeks, and could not see even me. When she was well enough to attend to business it was found that she inherited all her aunt's money, and as she had already accepted me, we were married a twelvemonth afterward. She had been awfuly lonely, she said, since Miss York's death, but no couple have ever lived happier and been nearer and dearer to each other than Ella and I. May God bless her!"

"Amen!" said I, solemnly and reverently.

"Ella and I," pursued Jim, "could never give the remotest guess as to her aunt's objection to our engagement, and it would probably have remained a mystery to me, as it has to Ella even now, had it not been for the following circumstances. Some time ago I was sent for at the prison to see a rather desperate character, whose end was very near. He had been sent to seven years' penal servitude some three years before for forgery, and after serving two years at Portland had been transferred to Lowmarket. His appearance was superior to that of the ordinary convict, even when a forger. Although I had seen him several times, and certainly been struck with his face and appearance, we could not be said to be friendly, as he had been indifferent to all my advances.

"I found him living in the hospital, and I soon saw that he would not live very long.

"'You seem pleased to see me?' I said.

"'Yes, sir,' replied No. 152. 'I am glad you've come; I hardly expected you would, considering how standoffish I've been. But I wanter to see you, as the doctor says I'm not likely to last much longer.'

"I talked to him about his soul and spiritual things. That we may pass by, Howson; I believe he was thoroughly penitent. I asked him if there was anything I could do for him.

"'Yes, sir, there is one thing, if you will. It's such a curious one, I hardly like to ask you.' His eyes looked eagerly at me.

"'Go on,' I said; 'I'll do it if possible.'

"'I've had a queer life, sir,' said the convict. 'I might have been somebody and done some good; but I got led astray after marriage, and broke the heart of my wife, who died soon afterward. Yes, I've led a bad life, and it's precious few friends I've had lately, anyhow. But I hope I may be forgiven, as you say God will pardon even the worst of us. And if you'll promise me to do one thing when I'm dead, I shall die happy.'

"'I'll promise as far as I can,' said I. 'What is it?'

"'It's to take care of your wife,' answered No. 152. 'Ah,' said he, smiling, 'I thought that would astonish you.'

"'Take care of my wife!' I gazed at him in amazement. 'Why, of course I shall! But what is that to you?'

"'A great deal,' said he.

"'Why?'

"'Because she's—my daughter!'

"I looked at him in terror and astonishment, and was about to send for the nurse and for the doctor, feeling sure he was rambling, when he said, slowly:

"'Sit down, sir, please; I can't talk much longer. You need not send for Dr. Darton, I'm all right. I feared it would give you a shock, sir, as it gave me one the first time I saw her here with you. Ella York—you see I know her name all right—was taken when quite a child by her aunt, who disowned me, and never told the child what her father was. In that she was quite right. She changed her name from Wilson to her mother's name of York, and completed the disguise. Whenever I desired—and oh, sir, I did often desire—to see Ella, my darling, Miss York has always threatened me with the police, and I knew better than to have them on my track, if I could help it. Yes, sir, I see you can't realize it yet, but you'll find Ella Wilson's birth and baptism in the registers of Northfield, and I give you my word it is true.'

"I sat in dumb silence. What could I say? Ella, my wife, a convict's daughter!

"'Please, sir, don't tell her,' said he. 'She has never known; don't let her know. But I felt I must tell you, sir, and you'll not think any worse of her?' and his eyes looked pleadingly and wistfully at me.

"My senses had somewhat returned.

"'No,' said I, 'of course not. I am half dazed, but I feel what you say is true. But Ella is my own now, and always shall be while I live. I wish I had not heard this, but it cannot alter my love for Ella.'

"'Thank God!' he said. 'And, sir, there's one thing more. The doctors say I shall sleep myself away. Do you think it could be managed for my darling to give me one kiss ere I die, just one?'

"'I'll try. Yes,' said I, 'she shall, if you'll leave it to me.'

"'I will! God bless you, Mr. Bourn.'

"I left him. When I got home Ella thought I was ill, and indeed I was. Overwork, I pleaded. In another hour they came to tell me he was asleep, and would not wake in this world.

"I took Ella with me to the hospital. 'Ella,' said I, 'a prisoner who is dying, and who has no—few—friends, told me to-day how he had seen you and would like you to kiss him ere he died, as his own daughter would have done. Will you?'

"'Certainly, my darling.'

"And with eyes full of tears she did. The unconscious form rose, the eyelids half opened, the face smiled. She didn't know; did she?

"I led her away, weeping; my own heart full. I afterward verified his story. But Ella has never known any more, Howson, and never will. There is sometimes a secret which should not be shared between husband and wife, Howson, isn't there?

"You're right, dear old Jim," said I, as he grasped my hand in silence, but with tear-dimmed eyes. "You're right, old fellow, and God bless you both!"—Grit.

SUBMARINE BOAT.

Invention of Richard Raddatz Swims and Dives Like a Duck.

The Raddatz submarine boat has been recently submitted to various tests, which, it is claimed, amply prove its approximate perfection. The young inventor is Mr. Richard Raddatz, whose fame had not extended beyond the limits of his native town of Oshkosh, Wis., before he became the inventor of a boat, the principle of which has been a problem that has absorbed inventors and men of science for many years.

The boat as she is to-day looks very like a war vessel of the most aggressive type; her steel prow being strong enough to pierce the sides of any armored cruiser, and very likely that of any man-of-war. In appearance she is shaped like a huge cigar or torpedo, tapering gradually to either end, and presenting to the water a surface in which the resistance is practically reduced to nothing.

She is 65 feet long 4 feet wide and 7 feet 6 inches high, and is built on a heavy framework of angle irons, steel plates closely fitted over one another. Her weight is 31 tons, and her construction for resisting the enormous pressure of the water at the depths in which she will at times be submerged is perfect. Once in the water, if for a surface trip, there is little to be seen, nothing, in fact, save the two turrets projecting above the water, and as these are only two feet high the spectacle is not suggestive of the great interest that is below.

THE RADDATZ BOAT.

Under the aft turret is the engineer, the outlines of the hot air engine showing just forward of the turret. The propeller shaft runs forward to the air engine, and near this engine are the storage battery cells in the sides of the boat. On the under side of the boat forward of the propeller is a long and rather slender rudder. One of the most interesting things to men of science is the method by which the boat is lowered and raised, and this is one of the secrets which the inventor is not yet ready to make known. Certain it is that a method which might with profit be employed by elevator companies, for in the sinking, and raising again, as well as in all the turnings in the water, not the slightest shock is observable. Every motion is made with the most perfect ease and grace, and this thirty-one-ton man-of-war disports itself in the deep as naturally as a porpoise.

The interior of the boat can be made as light as desired. A wire loop runs from the dynamo, on which are three incandescent lights. The boat can be raised and lowered at the rate of three feet a second, and she dives in the water as readily as a duck in response to an almost imperceptible pressure by the pilot. As experimented with up to date the boat has been run at a rate of fourteen miles an hour on the surface of the water, while an approximate speed of ten miles has been attained under the water, but for all ordinary trips she has been run at a rate of from three to five miles per hour. The inventor and the members of the syndicate express themselves as satisfied with this speed as being sufficient for all practical purposes, at least at present.

The problem of the air in the boat was a vital one, in the full sense of the term. Here again one encounters a carefully guarded secret as to the full details, but it is known that the air is mixed on the boat—"mixed" being the term employed by Mr. Raddatz instead of "manufactured." It is kept pure by the chemical generation of oxygen and the carbonic acid gas in the air in the boat is absorbed by caustic potash, caustic soda and lime.

A Profitable Failure.

"When I was old enough to strike out in business," tells a citizen who attained prominence years ago, "Bowley wanted me to go into partnership with him and build up a big hardware trade. Having won the prize debate at college, and made several campaign speeches in the back school districts, I flattered myself that I was destined for something more brilliant than a prosy business career. I was bent on gaining a reputation, world-wide and enviable. As an initial step I proposed to take to the lecture field, and made my first appointment at a little town in Indiana. I charged a pretty stiff admission price for those times and in such a locality, and it swelled my head considerably to make my bow before a crowded house.

"My subject was 'Light,' and, after a scientific consideration of the topic, it was my purpose to turn on some light fun just to show my versatility and send the people home saying what a promising young man I was. I had talked about five minutes when I noticed some of the folks on the front seat nodding and yawning. Three minutes later there was only a person here and there whose eyes met my own, and at the end of ten minutes every soul within the range of my vision appeared to be asleep. Bound to arouse them, yet stick to my subject, I shouted at the top of my healthy lungs: 'Blot out the sun, extinguish the moon, obliterate the stars——'

"'And blow out the gas,' cut in a red-nosed old patriarch who pretended to awake with a snort.

"That settled it. The meeting broke up in a roar. I left town before daylight and was in the hardware business a year before I knew that my partner had bought every ticket and put up the job."—Detroit Free Press.

When We Grow Old.

One of the first surprises that people have as they begin to realize that they are leaving the record of a goodly number of years behind them, is that people think they are old. Casual remarks to that effect made before them come as a distinct shock. The spirit does not grow old; it is merely hampered by physical infirmities, and more particularly public opinion.

People are made old; they give up youthful practices because people think they should, though that was more in the past than in the present. There is no doubt that people, women particularly, lost much of their physical force because as they grew older it was "proper" for them to give up this and that and settle down. Now that grandmothers ride the bicycle, things have changed somewhat.

Almost anyone can remember, as a child, wondering how it would seem to be very old—in the child's estimation, 20, 30, even 40 years. Then when the 20, 30, even 40 years have passed, the child, who has become a woman, looks back and thinks that she feels little older and surprisingly little wiser than that child.—New York Times.

Ministers' Bible.

An Englishman has invented a Bible with two rollers set in the cover, on which may be wound a roll of paper containing a sermon, or the paper may be used for taking notes in meetings, et cetera.

There is nothing more uncertain than a sure thing.

THE STUDENTS' MONUMENT.

A Beautiful Column that Commemorates a Bloody Event.

Havana has one of the most beautiful cemeteries on the western hemisphere. Money has been lavished upon it and its costly monuments are works of fine art. The long, narrow passages of the city of the dead are closely fringed with magnificent marbles, but in the midst of this vast collection towers a beautiful and impressive pile which, in view of present conditions on the island, possesses considerable interest. Americans in Cuba always visit the spot where it stands and gaze in admiration upon its symmetrical outlines and figures.

The beautiful memorial is called the Monument to the Students. Sons of Cubans attending the University of Havana have always been against the Spanish rule on the island and have had anti-tyranny clubs. One night fifty or more years ago a party of these incipient revolutionists, bubbling over with the foolish patriotic enthusiasm of youth, climbed the cemetery fence and smeared the tomb of a dead captain general who, in his time, had been tyrannical toward the native population. The deed was a foolish prank properly punishable by expulsion or some such penalty. But the Spanish loyalists, the wealthy shop keepers of Havana—the Catalans, as they are properly called—demanded that a lesson in loyalty be taught. An investigation was held and the offense was charged to certain students. No one knew if they were guilty, but the Catalans insisted that they were. They said the offense was an act of treason. They called upon the captain general to inflict the death penalty. Spaniard though the executive of the island was, his mind revolted against such severity. The Catalans would have it. The students were led out one morning and shot to death. This was in no time of war. It was in accordance with Catalan policy to suppress and punish rigorously the slightest symptoms of revolt on the part of the native population. To the memory of these students the massive monument was raised. It stands to-day as silent evidence of deep-seated antagonism between Catalan and Cuban.

THE STUDENTS' MONUMENT.

Sea Otter Becoming Extinct.

The sea otter is an animal which is fast becoming extinct. So precious are their skins that the otter has been hunted with vengeance, and only a few, comparatively, remain. There is one fine specimen in the National Museum which is mounted in a most lifelike manner. The institution bought the skin and paid $250 for it, which is not deemed an extraordinary price. In a few years, it is thought, they will have disappeared altogether.—Washington Star.

Application for Patent.

NOTICE No. 320.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
Independence, Calif.
January 28, 1898.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT Hugh J. Cannon, whose postoffice address is Salt Lake City, Salt Lake county, State of Utah, has made application for a patent for twenty-nine hundred and fifty linear feet of the Confidence and Mendocino Lode bearing gold, situate in no organized mining district, Inyo county, State of California, and described in the official plats and field notes on file in this office as follows, viz:

Said Confidence mining claims described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at a pine post three (3) feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "L. L. S. M." (identical with old lode line monument at southerly end of lode) whence main working shaft bears N. 77 deg 15 min E. 0.45 chains and U. S. L. M. No. 72 bears S 77 deg 47 min E 4.54 chains distant.

Thence the variation of the magnetic needle be 15 deg 15min E along line of lode N 25 deg 15 min E 1.20 chains intersection of ravines 2.42 chains mouth of small tunnel 20 links to east 5.30 chains ravine course E and W and end of big outcrop 7.12 chains shaft No 2 30 links to right, 16 links deep on vein 7.40 chains hole 10 links to right 8.37 chains ravine course N E and S W 17.92 chains ravine course N E and S W 21.97 chains 1450 feet to pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "L. L. N. M." (identical with original load line monument at northerly end of lode.)

SURVEY OF EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES

Beginning at corner No. 1. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed U.S.S. 67, No. 1, identical with corner number 1 of Mendocino location of this survey. Whence U. S. location monument No. 72 bears N 20 deg 50 min E 1 1-10 feet. Said location monument is a granite stone 30 inches long, 20 inches wide, 6 inches thick, marked "U.S.L.M. No. 72," set 15 inches in ground with brass plate set in top, with conical mound of stone, 6 feet square and 4 feet high beside it. From said U. S. L. M. No. 72, mouth of Confidence tunnel bears N 53 deg 15 min W 3.94 chains. The top of main working shaft bears N 74 deg 15 min W 4.14 chains. And a hill just north of the bend where the road to the mine from Death Valley turns eastward (the only hill there that has large detached blocks of granite covering its east side) bears N 74 deg 37 min W about 3 miles 60 chains.

Thence the variation being 15 deg 15 min east.

Course No. 1, N 77 deg 34 min W 1.06 chains cross small ravine, course N W and S E 4.545 chains 300 feet to south lode line monument of this location, whence shaft No 1 bears N 36 deg 15 min E 3.43 chains shaft No. 3 bears N 19 deg 30 min E 12.12 chains 9.09 chains 600 feet to corner No. 2 identical with corner No. 5 Mendocino location of this survey.

A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone, scribed "U.S.S. 67 No 2," whence intersection of ravines bears N 75 deg 30 min E 2.12 chains thence deflecting 102 deg 49 min to right and along westerly boundary of this claim.

Course No 2, N 25 deg 15 min E 0.61 chains road in ravine 1.67 chains road to cabin 2.27 chains to the S W corner of cabin 30 feet by 60 feet 9.09 chains to ravine 21.97 chains 1450 feet to corner No. 3, a pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground in stone mound scribed "U.S.S. 67, No 3" whence location corner of this location bears north 66 deg 30 min west, 1 50-100 chains on north side of ravine. Thence deflecting 77 deg 11 min to right. Course No. 3, S 77 deg 34 min E 4.454 chains, 294 feet to north lode line monument of this location, previously described. Whence ravine bears N 25 deg 15 min E 1 67-100 chains, course E and W 7.39 chains 487 8-100 feet, to corner No 4 location corner of this location. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with stone mound scribed "U.S.S. 67, No. 4," whence ravine bears N 20 deg 50 min E 2 50-100. Thence deflecting 98 deg 24 min to the right. Course No. 4, S 20 deg 50 min W 7.50 chains ravine 10.50 chains. Branch of ravine 15.00 chains ravine 18.00 chains ravine 21.22 chains ravine 21.65 chains 1429 feet to corner No. 1, the place of beginning. Containing seventeen and 64-100 acres.

Said Mendocino mining claim is described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at a pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 in ches in ground, with mound of stone scribed "L. L. N. M." (identical with old line monument) at northerly end of lode whence main working shaft bears N 77 deg 15 min E 0.45 chains and U. S. L. M. No 72 bears S 77 deg 47 min E 4.545 chains. Thence the variation of the magnetic needle being 15 deg 15 min E along line of lode S 34 deg 45 min W 0.50 chains small ravine course N W 1.80 chains small cut in outcrop of vein course E and W 2.20 chains shaft 60 feet deep, in vein, bears west 10 feet, 2.94 chains. Notice monument of Mendocino location 5.00 chains end of outcrop and north edge of gulch No. 1 course E and W 8.00 chains. South edge of gulch 21.70 chains north edge of gulch course E and W, 22.72 chains 1500 feet to pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 12 inches in ground in stone mound scribed "L. L. S. M." whence old lode line monument of this Mendocino location bears S 34 deg 45 min W 38 links distant.

SURVEY OF EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES.

Beginning at corner No. 1, identical with corner No. 1 of Confidence location of this survey. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone, scribed "U.S.S. 67 No. 1."

Thence the variation being 15 deg 15 min east.

Course No. 1, S 34 deg 45 min W 0.85 chains ravine course N W and S E 5.75 chains north side of gulch, course E and W 7.88 chains. South side of gulch, course E and W 21.21 chains. North side of gulch course E and W 22.73 chains 1500 feet to corner No. 2. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "U.S.S. 67 No. 2," whence corner of the location bears S 34 deg 45 min W 1.51 chains south side of gulch No. 2 bears 34 deg 45 min W 1.67 chains thence deflecting 67 deg 41 min to the right.

Course No. 2, N 77 deg 34 min W 4.545 chains 300 feet south lode line monument 5.85 chains 386.10 feet corner No. 3. A pine post 3 feet long, set 18 inches in ground, with mound of stone, scribed "U. S. S. 67, No. 3," on a ridge in center of gulch, no bearings available. Thence deflecting 19 deg 19 min right.

Course No. 3, N 58 deg 15 min W 3.35 chains 221 feet to corner No, 4 original location corner of the claim.

GEE-WHIZ.

At every motion of his body or limbs he said, "Gee-whiz." If he raised his arm or crooked his elbow, or when he got up or sat down or bent over; if he bent his knee or turned his head, he said "Gee-whiz." Gee-whiz was his way of expressing vexation and trouble, and he had his piece of it. Thousands do as he had done and have bushels of it. He simply did a very foolish thing. He took off his coat at the wrong time and in the wrong place. The time was when he was overheated and the place just where a cold draft struck him. He woke in the morning with soreness and stiffness from head to foot. If he had he thought him of the right thing to do as most men do, he would have gotten a bottle of St Jacobs Oil and rubbed it over his body. Use it on going to bed and you'll wake up, open your eyes and say, "Gee-whiz!" the soreness and stiffness are gone.

Floating Up a River.

It was a vexed question in 1890 whether the Pilcomayo river, which flows for hundreds of miles from the Bolivian Andes to the Paraguay, might be used as a commercial highway from Bolivia to the ocean. Our countryman, Captain Page, settled this question so conclusively that no further effort to utilize the Pilcomayo is likely to be made, and in this work, that cost him his life, for he died of his privations after being hemmed in for months by hostile Indians, he devised a plan for steaming up river when the water was so low that his vessel was stuck in the mud. He was determined to go still farther, though his little steamer, which drew only 18 inches, rested on the river bottom, so behind the boat he threw up an embankment of earth clear across the channel, backed it with palm trunks and brushwood, and before long the water had risen a couple of feet, and the little Bolivia was able to go on her way four miles before she stuck again. Then another dam was built, and this process was repeated seven times, and with the aid of the dams the vessel advanced about 35 miles above the highest point she could reach at the natural low water stage.—Harper's Round Table.

ECONOMY IN BUYING SEEDS.

Economy is not paying less money for a thing than you expected to pay. True economy is good management, and about the worst management is a farmer can be guilty of is to buy cheap seeds and thus cut the value of his crops in half or worse. A stream cannot rise higher than its source, and a crop cannot be any better than its seed. Real seed economy is buying seeds that bear the stamp of a house that is known to be reliable. Then the planter is absolutely sure that he gets what he wants and what he pays for. In every part of the country dealers sell the absolutely reliable seeds of D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, Mich., which have given uniform good results for the last 42 years. Ferry's Illustrated Seed Annual for 1898, containing information that no farmer or gardener can afford to be without, will be sent free to anyone making application to the firm.

: THE LIE JOE SAVAGE TOLD. :

OLD settlers in the southern part of Baylor County, Texas, still make occasional reference to the Savages, or the Savage brothers, as they sometimes call them. This does not refer to the time when the Indians were in the country, although that time is by no means so far distant as to be beyond the memory of living man; nor does it imply anything especially wild and ferocious about the character of the men in question. It merely goes back to the first half of the '80s, when two brothers of that name were among the prominent inhabitants of that sparsely settled district. In some countries events of that period would be considered comparatively modern, but in Western Texas they are ranked as strictly ancient history.

It seems, from a careful survey of the facts in the case, that neither of the brothers was really a bad man at heart, notwithstanding the fact that a great many people who ought to know are strongly inclined to think otherwise. It is certain that one of them is as true a man as ever trod the soil of Texas, or any other State, for that matter. All who knew him agree that the final year of his life, at any rate, was a year of such courage and self-sacrificing heroism as one reads of in books, but seldom looks for in real life. The people of West Texas are not much prone to hero worship, and whenever they agree that a man of their acquaintance is above the average of mortality there is very likely to be some basis for the belief. Judging merely from physical appearances, one would have had little trouble in deciding which of the two men would be more likely to prove of heroic mold. Bill, the younger, was a man of magnificent physique, not unduly large, but with muscles of such herculean strength as perfect air and the free life of a Western cowboy are apt to impart. He was light-complexioned and is said to have possessed a vigorous, manly countenance, such as ought to have made him more successful in his love affairs than he really was. Joe, on the other hand, was as much a picture of weakness and deformity as his brother was of health and strength. He was not only a peaked faced, slender slip of a man, but he was a cripple as well. When he was 5 years old and Bill was only 3, a cyclone had struck the log house in which the boys and their parents were living. The mother and father were killed, but when the neighbors came to look through the ruins of the cabin they found Joe crouched on the bed with his limbs spread out in such a manner as to protect his baby brother. A heavy log had fallen across his right foot and right wrist, crushing them both very badly, but Bill was still sleeping in absolute unconsciousness of the existence of any such disturbing affairs as cyclones. As a result of his injuries at the time, Joe was "club-footed" through the whole of his life, and his right forearm had a big knot on it, and a crook that made his right hand turn out when it should have turned in. It is said that Joe was proud of his deformities rather than otherwise, presumably because they had been incurred in the defense of his baby brother, and that Bill was, for the most part, tenderly regardful of the brother who had sacrificed health and almost life for him.

"HELLO! ARE YOU LOST?"

Naturally enough, Bill was the more prosperous of the two. Before he was 30 he owned a considerable "bunch" of cattle, and leased quite a body of land in the eastern part of Baylor County as a ranch. Joe was his line rider, and in that capacity was able to do a great deal of such work as did not require any very great amount of mere muscular strength. Everything worked smoothly with them until May Conley came to live with a married brother of hers who lived only a few miles from the Savage ranch. She was not a highly educated girl, by any means, and it is doubtful if she was more than fairly intelligent; but she was pretty, and she was fickle—and that tells the whole story. In this case Joe was the first victim. He met May at one of the big camp meetings that are common in that country in the fall of the year, and after that he was very pronounced in his attentions to her for several months. Then his attentions ceased as suddenly and abruptly as they had begun. People noticed this and they also noticed that just about that time Bill began going to see her.

"Bill took it up just where Joe laid it down," remarked one cowboy to another during one of the intervals in a dance on one occasion.

"Naw, that ain't it," responded his friend. "I think Joe laid it down just where Bill took it up."

One day as the two brothers and one or two others were engaged in branding some of Bill's yearlings the subject was brought up.

"Sure enough, Joe, whatever made you quit goin' to see that Conley gal so suddent?" asked Jim Smith, one of the helpers in a loose way.

"I stopped so's to give Bill a chance," said Joe, with what was evidently a forced attempt at gayety.

"Shucks!" ejaculated his brother. "You needn't a stopped for that. If I couldn't beat you I'd better quit."

There was just the least bit of contemptuous emphasis on that word "you," and Joe noticed it. A slightly shamed, pained look came over his poor, thin face as he faltered:

"W—well, I didn't keep much for her, no way. I was just a foolin' from the first."

My very deliberate opinion is that this statement was a lie. It is my opinion, furthermore, that in this single, ungrammatical, mispronounced, mutilated lie there was a loftiness of thought and purity of purpose such as an angel in heaven might well aspire to. Bill did not take any such view of the matter, though, for he only looked up and retorted angrily:

"My opinion of anybody that would go foolin' 'round a woman when he didn't care nothing for her is that he ain't much man."

"He's pretty small potatoes—he shore is," put in Tom Jackson, the fourth man at the branding. Nobody noticed the remark particularly at the time, but subsequent events caused them to think a great deal about it later on.

"I'm surprised at you, Joe," said Bill.

The ghost of a forced smile hovered piteously on Joe's lips for a moment, but he merely rubbed his forehead with the knob on his wrist in the nervous way peculiar to him on such occasions, and said nothing.

Aside from one or two little incidents like this—which are hardly worth counting as exceptions—Bill's courtship was an illustration of the fact that, notwithstanding a certain very eminent authority to the contrary, the course of true love does occasionally run smooth—for awhile. In this case it ran smooth down to the very day set for the wedding. The ceremony was to be performed at what was known as Plum Creek school house, and early in the morning Bill went with a number of his friends to get ready for the festivities. In some countries it might not be considered as a part of the groom's duties to make these preparations, but in Texas it is etiquette for anybody to do anything provided there was not some one else to do it.

The ceremony was to take place at 10 o'clock. Perhaps half an hour before that time Joe and his friend Jim Smith were riding through the timber which always abounds around creek bottoms in Texas, and were much astonished when, at a sudden bend in the trail, they came across the supposed prospective bride. She was on horseback and unaccompanied.

"Hello!" exclaimed Joe in surprise. "Are you lost?"

"Yes," answered May, with a nervous laugh. "I never was so glad to see anybody in my life. This here creek bottom timber's so thick a wildcat would mighty nigh get lost in it—let alone a woman."

"I should think you and Bill had been to Plum Creek schoolhouse often enough to know the way by this time?"

"I ain't goin' to Plum Creek," said May, with a foolish giggle.

"What! Ain't you goin' to get married?"

"Yes."

"Well, Bill's at the schoolhouse now, a waitin' for ye."

May tossed her head and then giggled again.

"I ain't waitin' for him none," she said. "I might as well tell you now as any time. I'm goin' to be married to Tom Jackson this morning at Round Timbers. I've lost my way there and I want you to tell me how to go."

At the mention of Jackson's name Joe's face hardened for a moment. He was the man who had been so quick to take Bill's part in the quarrel with his brother. Then Joe began to reason with Mary as to her conduct, but a very few moments sufficed to show him the futility of the attempt. Promptly changing his plans, he gave her a detailed account of the way to Round Timbers.

"Say!" interrupted Jim Smith, who had listened in profound astonishment to the whole conversation, "you're mistaken about——"

"No, I ain't," retorted Joe. "The trail's been changed lately. That's all right, May. Come on, Jim."

"I still think you were mistaken about that trail," said Jim, as the two men rode on together.

"No, I wasn't mistaken," said Joe. "I just lied—that was all. I did it for Bill's sake. If May goes the way I sent her she'll not get to Round Timbers this morning."

After they had ridden a few moments in silence, Joe began again:

"Jim, old fellow, for God's sake don't let on that you've seen or heard nothing this morning. It'll be plenty tough on Bill, anyway."

"I shore won't," said Jim.

There was quite a crowd assembled around the door of the little log school house when these two men rode up. The groom was there and so was the preacher; so also were the people. The house was decorated within and without with flowers and leaves and other ornaments more or less appropriate to the occasion. However, there was one ornament generally considered necessary on wedding occasions which was still missing—namely, the bride.

"See anything of May lately?" asked Bill, stepping to the front as the new comers rode up. There was just a trace of anxiety in his voice as he spoke.

"Naw," answered Joe promptly. His face looked perfectly unconcerned as he spoke, but in a very few moments a cloud began to rest upon it. I suspect, though, that instead of grieving over the lie he had told—as of course he should have been—he was merely wondering how he might spare Bill the mortification which a public discovery of the real facts in regard to May might occasion. He was now sitting with one leg thrown over the horn of his saddle. Suddenly his face lighted up with its old sickly smile, and in a voice that trembled a little in spite of the bravado he tried to throw into it, he began:

"Say, Bill, that was the devil of a lie I told you about May just now. I saw her not over half an hour ago."

"You did, did you? When will she be here?"

"She won't be here at all."

Bill's face grew stern and white.

"Why won't she?" he demanded.

"Because I directed her in the wrong road. Jim tried to tell her right and I wouldn't let him. Ain't that so, Jim?"

Jim nodded grimly. With faces that now began to grow drawn and anxious, the spectators glanced from one speaker to the other in turn. Bill's face was fairly livid with rage, and his voice trembled with the awfulness of repressed fury as he asked the next question:

"What did you do it for?"

The expectant silence that followed was deathlike, but even then Joe's voice was hardly audible as he answered with the same sickly smile hovering about his white lips:

"Because I useter court her myself and you cut me out!"

Before the words were fairly out of his mouth Bill sprang at him with the fury of a wild beast. With all the force of his mighty arm he struck and the blow descended upon the arm—the crippled, knotted arm—which Joe had interposed to ward it off. Some say it descended upon the very knot itself. He fell from his pony as if he had been shot, and lay for several moments on the turf where he had fallen.

"Which way did you send her?" asked Bill, in the same awful tones he had used before.

"I won't tell," gasped Joe.

"Then get off that ground!"

Joe meekly obeyed.

"Get on your pony—no, I see it's got away from you. Then saddle up mine yonder and go after May and bring her back at once, sir! Do you hear?"

Joe meekly took the huge Texas saddle in his left hand and carried it to where the pony was grazing, tied by a long rope to a tree. His right arm hung limp by his side. After some ineffectual efforts to throw on the saddle with his left arm he gave up the attempt.

"I can't get the thing on," he said.

"Use your right arm, sir!" called his brother.

"I think you've broke his game arm, Bill," said Jim Smith.

"It's a lie!" shouted Joe, "that arm's as good as ever it was."

To prove the truth of this assertion he made a mighty effort and managed to lift his arm to his shoulder, though the wrist still dangled loosely from his elbow. Even then he could not restrain his face from wincing and his teeth from clinching with the pain. Dropping the saddle he turned abruptly and limped off into the woods without a word.

Jim Smith afterward said that only his solemn promise to Joe kept him from telling the whole truth at this juncture just as he knew it to be, and that he had to grit his teeth hard and say cuss words under his breath to do it then. As to the rest of the crowd, it must be remembered that they knew nothing but Joe's own statement about the matter, and consequently they all sympathized with Bill. After some moments of condolence and consultation with the crowd, Bill, with some four or five others, started out to find Joe.

"Get that rope off your saddle there and bring it along," he said to one of the men.

"You ain't goin' to string him up, are you, Bill?" was the rather anxious reply.

"No; just want to skeer him a little. Come on."

In a very short time they found the man they were looking for.

"Are you ready to tell where May is, or to go after her?" Bill demanded.

"N-no," faltered Joe, with a distrustful glance at the little group of attendants.

Again his brother sprang at him. This time he threw him to the ground and held him there with his grasp firm upon his throat.

"Don't, Bill, old fellow, for God's sake," gasped Joe, as his brother somewhat relaxed the grip on his throat. "I didn't mean no harm by it—honest, I didn't. I won't do it no more. What are you going to do with that rope, Bill? You're not going to kill your poor, no-account brother, are you, old boy?"

Without a word Bill and his attendants continued wrapping the rope around Joe. Then they stood him up beside a tree and tied him to it, so that his club foot touched the ground, while the other, the strong one, was doubled back in the coil of rope.

"Now, you ungrateful whelp," said Bill, as he started to leave, "I'll be back in thirty minutes to see if you're ready to tell me."

"Didn't he kiss your hand as you was tying him?" asked some one as they walked away.

"Dogged if I know," said Bill. "Did he?"

Hardly had they left when Jim Smith came up and at once began to untie the ropes.

"Don't!" said Joe. "Bill will be back in a few minutes. Just unslip this loop here. Thank you! The strain was on my right arm, and it hurt, because it was sore, Jim, this is hard—but I guess I can stand it, for Bill's sake. I ain't hurtin' so much now, though, as I was. It's mostly all a joke. Bill was always a powerful fellow to joke. I wisht you'd go tell him when he comes back please not to bring anybody else with him."

At the appointed time, Bill saddled his pony and rode off to where Joe was.

"I'll take the hoss, so that if Joe's ready by now he can start off after May and bring her back. I rather guess he's ready by now, too. Maybe we'll get to eat a wedding dinner today, yet—only a little late, of course."

After some time had elapsed and neither brother had "showed up," as the phrase goes in Texas, Jim Smith walked to the place where he had left Joe. There the poor fellow was, still tied to the tree—but dead! The thirty minutes' strain had been too much for his crippled leg to bear, and it had gradually given way, and this had allowed the poor fellow to choke to death. Of course, Jim lost no time in rousing the quasi wedding guests, and in telling the real facts about May. It is not the first instance in the history of the world where a man has had the truth told about him too late to do him any good. A pursuing party was out after Bill at once, but all was to no avail. Some say he committed suicide shortly afterward in San Antonio; others, that he is still alive in New Mexico; still others, that he is to-day in the insane asylum at Terrell. I do not know what the truth about it is. Mr. and Mrs. Tom Jackson still live in Cottle

STILL TIED TO THE TREE, BUT DEAD.

County, Texas. Jim Smith is the man who first told me this story. Joe Savage is buried on the banks of Plum Creek, and on his wooden headboard you can still decipher the inscription: "He Loved Mutch."

The Scripture had to be misquoted to suit the gender of the pronoun and the spelling is slightly peculiar, but I can not help thinking the inscription a good one. Many people consider love a very good thing, and Prof. Drummond has written a book to prove that it is The Greatest Thing in the World. If these estimates are correct Joe Savage was certainly a great and good man; for greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend.—Utica Globe.

SUBSTITUTES FOR PRAYING.

Parrots and Prayer Wheels Among the Kalmuck Tartars.

Finally, if you spend most of your time, as I did, among the natives on the hurricane deck, your attention will be attracted by a third class of worshipers, namely, the Kalmuck Tartars, who live in felt tents or kibitkas (kee-beet-kas) along the lower Volga, and who wander, with great herds of cattle and camels, over the steppes of Eastern Europe and Western Asia. These flat-faced, ill-looking nomads are all Buddhists; and not only do they pray, but they may fairly claim the credit of having reduced devotion to a science. Praying five times a day, as the Mohammedans do, or even twice a day, after the custom of the fire worshipers, seems to have been too severe a tax upon the energies of the original Buddhists, and they set their ingenuity at work to devise some means of lessening the labor. The first expedient that occurred to them was teaching parrots to pray and then claiming the credit of the prayers thus said by proxy. This answered the purpose very well at first; but teaching parrots was troublesome, and besides that, the parrots, in spite of all precautions, would occasionally pick up scraps of profane learning, which they intermingled with their devotions in a manner not at all edifying. So the Buddhists finally abandoned the instruction of parrots and calling in the aid of applied science invented the prayer wheel. Nobody, it seems to me, but the laziest of Asiatics would ever have thought of introducing labor-saving machinery into the realm of the spiritual; but the Buddhists not only thought of it, but put the idea promptly into execution. The prayer wheel used by the Kalmuck Tartars on the Lower Volga is a small wooden cylinder six or eight inches in length and about two inches in diameter, turning upon a vertical axis, the lower end of which is extended and thickened to form a handle. This cylinder is stuffed full of short, written prayers, and every time it is turned upon its axis all the prayers that it contains are regarded as duly said. Could anything be more simple or satisfactory? There is no shutting of the eyes, no getting down on the knees in uncomfortable positions, no facing in any particular direction. All that the prayer has to do is to give his wheel a twirl and it grinds out prayers with a rapidity and fluency which leaves nothing to be desired. But from an Occidental point of view the whole performance is, of course, an absurdity. I could feel some respect for the prayers of the Mohammedans and of the fire worshipers, but the wooden wheels of the Kalmuck Tartars excited only contemptuous amusement.—Independent.

Borrowing Trouble.

Borrowing is poor business at the best; but of all the unsatisfactory "no return-for-your-pains" occupations, the very worst in the world is borrowing trouble. To begin with, it is based on fancy, crankiness, undue nervousness, or the mental or moral idiosyncrasies that should have been trained out of the individual long before the years of childhood were passed. There are few people in the world more depressing and disheartening than those who are always seeing some shadow of coming evil. The world is sombre enough even at the best, and it is scarcely worth while to go out seeking for shadows or to conjure up purely imaginary ones.

WANTED, SOME BURGLARS.

They Were Requested to Call and Steal Valuable Heirlooms.

A man rushed into the business office of one of the daily papers and stopped at the advertising window. There he secured a pad of paper and a pencil with a string to it. He wrote and erased, and then tore up what he had written, chewing the fragments savagely while he made another copy.

"There," he said at last, as he thrust the paper into the hand of the advertising clerk, "count the words and tell me what they will cost for one insertion. I reckon that will fetch them."

This was the advertisement:

"Burglars are requested to call some night this week on Mr. and Mrs. Erastus Brown, Ash court. A door and window will be left open and every facility offered for removing the spoils."

"But this is a very unusual form of advertisement," said the clerk, with a troubled look. "I don't know whether to put it under the head of personal or educational. What is your motive, may I ask?"

"My motive?" said the advertiser, "is to get rid of an awful incubus of inherited truck without any responsibility fastened upon me. I might burn the house down, but in that case I would be expected to save the heirlooms or perish with them. Say, young man, were you ever the victim of a legacy?"

"No," said the clerk, with a friendly grin. "What a funny question."

"No old maid aunt ever died and left you a dozen battered silver teaspoons that had come down from Oliver Cromwell?"

"Never!"

"Lucky chap! Never had a solid silver punch bowl bequeathed to you by a bibulous old uncle who was a disgrace to the family while he lived, but promised to return and haunt you if you didn't entertain his comrades once a year out of that bowl?"

"I should say not."

"Nor a great-grandmother who left you a silver soup ladle with a coat of arms of some unknown dead and gone ancestor which must be placed under your pillow every night for safe keeping?"

"No," said the clerk. "I belong to plain, everyday people, and we haven't a coat of arms to our backs."

"Be thankful, young man. You little realize what a blessed lot is yours. To crown our misfortunes, another relative died in Paris last week and left us her diamonds. But I draw the line at diamonds, and so does my wife. We take turns now sitting up with the silver. After the burglars come and clean us out we shall begin to live. Put that advertisement in a good place, and I'll let you know if we hear from it. S'long."—Chicago Times-Herald

DESTRUCTIVE STORMS ALONG THE COAST.

Reports of maritime disasters along the coast come in thick and fast. People who "go down to the sea in ships" should bear in mind one thing in particular, namely, that it is highly desirable to take along a supply of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a remedy for sea sickness, Nausea, dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation, malaria, nervousness and kidney trouble, all succumb to its beneficent and speedy action.

A DOUBTFUL RECOMMENDATION. Buyer—Is this dog affectionate? Dealer—I should say so! I have sold him four times, and every time he's come back to me!

BEWARE OF MORPHINE.

Special forms of suffering lead many a woman to acquire the morphine habit. One of these forms of suffering is a dull, persistent pain in the side, accompanied by heat and throbbing.

MRS. LUCY PEASLEY, Derby Center, Vt., says:—"I was very miserable; was so weak that I could hardly get around the house, could do nothing without feeling tired out. "My monthly periods had stopped and I was so tired and nervous all of the time. I was troubled very much with falling of the womb and bearing-down pains. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; I have taken five bottles, and think it is the best medicine I ever used. Now I can work, and feel like myself. I used to be troubled greatly with my head, but I have had no bad headaches or palpitation of the heart, womb trouble or bearing-down pains, since I commenced to take Mrs. Pinkham's medicine. I gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to every suffering woman. The use of one bottle will prove what it can do."

NEWSY NOTES FROM BIG PINE.

BIG PINE, Feb 23, 1898.

ED. INDEPENDENT:—The late recurrence of Washington's birthday was honored by a grand ball at the Athens of the county on Monday night. Fish Springs was represented by Jimmie Connors, a son of a veteran. This celebration was the first effort of Gen John A. Logan Post, G.A.R. The hall was decorated in a manner illustrating the devotion of the old boys to the flag. At 8:30 o'clock the call was sounded for the grand march. This was answered by 53 couples—all brave men and fair women. The march was led by Mr. Morton George, son of a veteran, aided by Miss Mamie Clark, daughter of a defender of the Union; in fact the ancient rank and file of the Post attribute much o the success of this important feature of the occasion to her valuable hints and efficient drill. The members of the Post, headed by Commander Collins, reviewed the marchers, and were reminded of the grand review which marked the close of the late war.

At the conclusion of the march quadrilles were formed, and the first "hop" of the old boys was fairly on, and pursued its vigorous course until the natal day of "Truthful George" was well in evidence. Rations were then served at the Clark house by Comrade Harniss, Quartermaster and acting commisary of the Post, and the old boys—always good judges of properly served rations—acquitted Comrade Harniss of any remissness in the matter. A notable feature of the occasion was the bunching, in cotillions, of the ancients of the Post. The vanity of some of "we'uns" was aroused by the statement of one fair lady to the effect that the "vets" were equal in the matter o' square dances to the sons, and your scribe certainly overlooked any covert sarcasm contained in the statement referred to. The old boys were pleased and proud of the kindly rendered courtesies of the fair daughters of the veterans. It is a matter of regret that a full list cannot be submitted. Misses Minnie Collins, Laura Shelly and Mamie Clark were personally known to yours truly as having been present, and rendered valuable assistance to the old vets in entertaining their guests.

The floor management by the trinity from the ranks of the sons of veterans—Morton George, Comrade Green and John Collins was complete and pleasing. Comrade Georgo Collins informed your correspondent that the leather medal award will be close between Comrade Ober of Bishop and a bald headed vet from the hamlet of Big Pine.

The receipts clearly illustrated the warm and generous response accorded our appeal for aid to properly celebrate Memorial day, and the vets will do their best to properly invest the funds for that sacred purpose.

Tuesday, the 22d, was observed earnestly and honestly by the dwellers of this place. At sunrise the school flag was hoisted by Miss Mabel Chalfant. Horse races were done as follows: Joe Stewart's Keno outfooted quadrupeds belonging to Josheph Shaw and McKillip, respectively, purse $15. Geo. Mitchell's horse, Chappo, outran horses of young Ober, McKillip, J. C. Miller and Charlie Sanders; the third and last turf sensation was a contest by steeds owned respectively by Vernon Smith, John Collins, Randall and Young Cuddigan's Klondike; winner, Randall's Smasher. Expert turf followers claim that but for the fact that Klondike ran afoul of a youthful member of the bovine family, causing serious stoppage in transit, the $15 purse would have fallen his way.

The occasion concluded with a dance at the Williams' House, which was a howling success from start to finish.

Nap Baker has purchased the Tibbets ranch, and henceforth Napoleon will dwell near the big pines.

SWAMPER.

The curious assumption that gold is only to be found in the British part of the Northwest is certain, sooner or later, to give way to some important discoveries in Alaska. Already it is reported, on what are said to be authentic grounds, that miners on the American side of the line have taken $50,000 in coarse gold from the crevices in the rocks beside a hitherto unknown creek. If this is true, the stream suggests greater possibilities than the Klondike did when George Cormack canned out the first nuggets from its gravel, and will easily draw to it the thousands who are unable to find a location in the Dawson district. There is no more reason to think that British soil has a monopoly of the precious metal of the vicinage than there was to believe that El Dorado county had it when the excitement broke out in California in 1848. The same range of mountains which must contain the mother lode from which the Klondike, Stewart and Pelly rivers and the upper Yukon got their yellow grains and nuggets, stretches westward into Alaska for a thousand miles and more. The geographical line that crosses it does not define the limits of the pay streak; and, for all anyone knows to the contrary, the real bonanza is in that vast Territory that has already developed the Treadwell and made its owners millionaires.—Chronicle.

Bodie Wisdom.

Bodie Miner Index: Adolph Sutro, the millionaire of San Francisco, has become demented. If we had his money we would probably be in the same fix before long.

As a harbinger of good times and evidence that the wave of prosperity is rolling over the country, it may be stated that the Virginia peanut crop is enormous.

Mining men in El Paso are excited over a phenomenally rich silver deposit discovered on the line of the Rio Grande, Sierra Madre and Pacific Railroad in old Mexico, about 100 miles from El Paso. Francisco Conado of that city discovered the deposit three miles from the railroad track, where it had been tramped over for months unnoticed by railroad men. Conado brought samples of the ore to town, and they assayed 26,000 ounces of silver to the ton.

The California Rand is the name of a new paper published at Johannesburg, by Charles Fuller Gates. While small, it is very neat, and is a valuable addition to our exchange list. With papers published at Randsburg, Johannesburg and Garlock, the desert mining region is well represented in a journalistic way.

LOOKS LIKE WAR!

As announced in a brief dispatch last week the U. S. Battleship Maine lies at the bottom of Havana harbor, while two of her officers and 253 members of her crew have gone to a watery grave or have been mangled beyond recognition.

Nothing certain is known yet, nor will be until the report of the board of enquiry, which began its sessions last Monday, is made public, but all reports go to show that the disaster was caused by the explosion of a submarine mine or a torpedo.

At Washington the officials profess to believe the cause to be accidental, but the sudden shifting of U. S. troops, the large forces of men put at work in the navy yards, fortifications, etc., re-enforcements ordered to all coast points and the ordering of the naval reserve into active drill shows the uneasy feeling that pervades the nation.

It is not unlikely that the dogs of war will soon be turned loose. Public sentiment throughout the country is at a high pitch.

A St Louis paper, in an article on "California's Golden Jubilee," after commenting on the great addition to the metallic supplies of the world which followed the gold discovery of Marshall, says: "But the rise of California in other forms of wealth is scarcely less wonderful. It has raised more than 30,000,000 bushels of wheat in one season, 40,000,000 pounds of wool and 10,000,000 gallons of wine. Its fruit crop last year was as valuable as its yield of gold." No doubt the Missouri editor thought he was paying the State a high compliment when he furnished these inaccurate statistics to his readers, but the facts would have rounded out his sentence in better shape. Instead of 10,000,000 gallons of wine, California produced 29,885,800 gallons in 1897. It has also greatly exceeded a 30,000,000 bushel production of wheat in several different years. But, in addition to the particular products mentioned, we claim to lead in the output of that nutritious article, the bean, no less than 87,462,500 pounds, worth $8,261,600, having been grown last year. We are also credited with a product of 9,124,600 centals of barley, 2,791,710 tons of hay, 725,250,000 feet of lumber, 7,762,600 pounds of nuts, 5,678,500 pounds of borax, 7,490,000 pounds of honey, 8,322,200 pounds of hops, and several other things that need not be mentioned here, but which when grouped with the products mentioned above, would afford much more ground for wonderment than the brief list of California products enumerated by the Missouri paper.

A dog who has eaten up a farm and a set of buildings has been found. This dog killed a neighbor's sheep. The neighbor offered to call it square if the dog was killed. The dog's master refused to agree to this, and a law-suit came next. To pay the costs and damages assessed by the court, the owner of the dog had to mortgage his farm for $25,000. The mortgage had a bigger appetitite than the dog, and soon his farm was gone, and the owner had to move away. The dog is now dead.

Miss Frances E. Willard, Supreme President of the W. C. T. U., died on Friday last, after a brief illness.

The Rand mine is producing eighty tons of ore per day, which is improving as depth is attained. The Wedge mine is doing considerable development work and the mine never looked better. This company has made application for a patent. The Little Butte is down over 400 feet, and is making regular shipments of rich ore. The King Solemon is another of Randsburg's deep mines which shows improvement as depth is attained. Its main shaft is down 425 feet and the recent strike at the 415 foot level contfnues rich in free gold.

Young Willie Hearst, who owns a "gernal" both in San Francisco and New York, is cut already with an offer of $50,000 for the discovery of the individual or nation who caused the explosion on the Maine. As the real cause of the explosion can be discovered only by an official investigation, the offer is a safe one. Mr. Hearst refers to the offer (in his own papers) as a "magnificent specimen of journalistic enterprise." To the average citizen the attempt to turn a national calamity into an advertisement for Mr. Hearst's newspapers appears to be a "magnificent specimen" of downright asiminity.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY AN ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE LEASED

In the Superior Court of the county of Inyo, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of William R. Tibbetts, deceased.

Upon reading and filing the petition of D. R. McLaren, praying that the administrator of the estate of William R. Tibbetts, deceased, be authorized, empowered and directed to lease the real estate belonging to said estate, which is described as follows, towit: The S. W. ¼ of the S. W. ¼ and the S. E. ¼ of the S. W. ¼ of Sec. No. 18, and the N. E. ¼ of the N. W. ¼ of Sec No. 19, Township No. 9 S., R No. 34 E. M. D. M.

It is ordered that all persons interested in said estate appear before the above entitled court on the 14th day of March, A. D. 1898, at the hour of ten o'clock A. M. at the court room of said court, to show cause, if any they can, why the said real estate should not be leased for the annual rental of $100, as is more fully set forth in said petition, reference to which is hereby made for further particulars.

Dated February 23d, 1898.

WALTER A. LAMAR,
Judge of said Superior Court.

Order of Adjudication of Insolvency.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE COUNTY OF INYO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

In the matter of Frank Philleisser, an insolvent debtor.

Frank Philleisser, having filed in this Court his petition, schedule and inventory in insolvency, by which it appears that he is an insolvent debtor, the said Frank Philleisser is hereby declared to be an insolvent debtor. The sheriff of the county of Inyo, is hereby directed to take possession of all the estate, real and personal of the said Frank Philleisser, debtor, except such as may be by law exempt from execution, and all of his deeds, vouchers, books of account and papers, and to keep the same safely until the appointment of an assignee of his estate. All persons are forbidden to pay any debts to said insolvent, or to deliver any property belonging to him, or to any person, firm or corporation or association for his use. The said debtor is hereby forbidden to transfer or deliver any property until the further order of this court, except as herein ordered.

It is further ordered that all the creditors of said debtor be and appear before the Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge of the Superior Court, in and for the County of Inyo, State of California, in open court at the court room of said court, in the town of Independence, County of Inyo, State of California, on Friday, the 25th day of February, 1898, at 10 o'clock a.m. of that day, to prove their debts and choose an assignee of the estate of said debtor.

And it is further ordered that this order be published in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper of general circulation published in the county of Inyo, State of California, as often as the said paper is published before the day set for the meeting of creditors.

And it is further ordered that, in the mean time, all proceedings against said insolvent be stayed.

WALTER A. LAMAR,
Judge of the Superior Court.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

Yesterday the following-named persons were drawn to serve as jurors in the three criminal cases now pending in the Superior Court, and ordered to appear in court on March 15:

S. R. Kennedy, A. Porteous, John Keegan, A. Dell, J. L. Hayes, N. Cooley, Henry Bell, Eugene E. Smith, F. K. Andrews, H. Hankhammer, John A. Dehy Luke E. Smith, Chas. Houle, O. F. Dearborn, E. E. Burdick, John Barlow, J. W. Tracey, Geo. A. Free, H. Gereken, Thos. Kehoe, Wm. H. Powers, J. C. Anton, Ruperto Carrasco, Thos. Hughes, J. F. Frager, J. C. Miller, Chris. Carrasco, F. W. Inman, Geo. H. Rose, Fred M. Crocker, Wm. H. Adams, J. W. Clark, Geo. W. Brady, John Davies, H. D. Gill, Jno. P. Smith, H. P. Nelligan, Geo. Thorpe, John F. Beale, Geo. Reinbakle, Henry Evans, J. W. McMurry, Hi. C. Hamilton, J. Halliday, L. W. Barneby, Newton Sheldon, Wm. Rowan, J. W. Holland, Mark Hand and Wm. H. Jenkins.

The following cases were set for trial:

People vs. Indian Pete, March 15th.
" " Laplant " 16th.
" " Naylor " 19th.

Frank Densmore has stood treat all week.

A. Diaz of Lone Pine was in town over Sunday.

R. S. Miner returned from Bridgport last Monday evening.

The dry season is causing great depression all over the state.

Sam McMurry, Jr., was down from Big Pine early in the week.

Mrs. Randall Slack went to Modock to join her husband last week.

Dave Holland returned Monday evening from Garlock, after a two-week's stay.

The birth of the great Washington was not celebrated here except by a social dance.

S. R. Kennedy of Bishop made final proof on his desert land filing at Warm Spring on Wednesday.

Omie Mairs arrived home from Los Angeles Monday. He reports the Southern country sadly in need of rain.

Hon. T. B. Rickey returned to his home at Carson yesterday after a month's stay in Independence and vicinity.

L. P. Yandell, J. E. Rambo and Mrs. L. V. Dorrance of Bishop were in town yesterday on land office business.

Charley Walters passed through town Monday on his way home to Aberdeen, after spenbing a short time in Ballarat.

Thorpe, Laprairie & Cook have run in their tunnel in Mazourka canyon 500 feet and are pushing the work rapidiy.

Mrs. Rose and Mrs. Schabbell, who are being treated at the German Hospital at San Francisco are reported as improving.

Robert O'Neil, C. H. Parsons and I. F. Smith came down from Bishop yesterday. They will remain over today and return tomorrow.

U. S. Weather Observer McLean has opened up headquarters in the small building adjoining the Norman House, formerly occupied by Dr. Doyle.

A sale of the personal propeyty of the estates of Henry Warner and Thos. Treglown will take place at the residence of Dr. I. J. Woodin on March 8, 1898.

The social dance given in honor of Washington's birthday was fairly well attended. A fine supper was served the participants at the Norman house.

Andy Ramsey washed out a pan of dirt in Mazourka canyon last Monday that netted him $11.75. If this happened in Klondike it would cause a rush, but being so near home causes little or no comment

MINING ITEMS

J. J. Gunn has a force of seven men at work at the Minnietta mine. A face of ore 30 feet long by seven feet wide is exposed, and the ore is broken down on canvas, sacked in the mine and taken out. Mr. Gunn will continue to ship ore until the weather becomes too hot, when he will suspend operations for the summer.

A week ago last Monday Frank Fitzgerald opened a body of gray carbonate lead ore, carrying about 200 ozs. of silver to the ton on the old Bismark mine at Modock, and since then has been taking out about 1000 pounds of ore per day with the labor of two men. Fitz's indomnitable pluck has stood him in good stead on many occasions when the prospects were blue, and the present strike is all the more gratifying from the fact that he found it himself, working alone The indications at last reports were favorable for opening up a large ore body.

Clarley Anthony has a force of men at work at Pleasant canyon grading out a millsite, and will remove his five stamp mill as soon as the ground is ready. Where the mill formerly stood it was necessary to pump the water a long distance up hill, and it was too costly and not practicable.

We recently visited the Montgomery mines in Pleasant canyon, about six miles east of Ballarat, and regret that lack of space forbids giving an extended description of them at this time. There is apparently no limit to the ore, the lowest grade of which runs $10 per ton. A Bryan mill is running on $25 ore, of which there is sufficient quantity in sight to keep the mill running steadily to its full capacity of $25 tons per day. It is the intention of the Montgomery Bros. to put in a cyanide plant at once, as they have over 2000 tons of tailings of an average assay value of $9 per ton. They have 24 mines surveyed for patent, and upon nearly all of them good ore bodies are developed. There is sufficient ore in sight to warrant the erection of a 100 ton per day plant, and there is no doubt but that this will be done within the year.

The board of state prison directors has fixed the price of grain bags for 1898 at $5.30 per 100. The directors issued an order that no sales exceeding 5,000 bags should be made to a single party.

It is not generally known that ex-Senator Tabor, who has just been appointed postmaster of Denver, sold to the government for $1 the land where the Denver postoffice now stands.

Workman began about two weeks ago on a stamp mill for Pridham & Quinn at Randsburg. The machinery is all on the ground. A 10,000 gallon redwood tank is contracted for, to be placed on the top of the hill to hold the water supply, and it will be but a short time until the dropping of the first stamp in Randsbusg will be heard.

IT IS BETTER.

It is better to whistle than whine;
It is better to laugh than to cry,
For though it is cloudy, the sun will soon shine,
Across the blue, beautiful sky.

It is better to whistle than whine,
O man, with the sorrowful brow,
Let the words of the child scatter murmurs of thine,
And gather his cheerfulness now.

It is better to whistle than whine,
Poor mother! so weary with care,
Thank God for the love and the peace that are thine,
And the joy of thy little ones share.

It is better to whistle than whine,
Though troubles you find in your way,
Remember that wise little fellow of mine,
And whistle your whining away.

God bless that brave boy for the cheer
He brought to this sad heart of mine;
When tempted to murmur, that young voice I hear,
"It is better to whistle than whine!"

FINALE.

PHILOSOPHER once observed that a man's character could be better judged by the books and and room he keeps than his company.

Cyril Graves, early in life, had devoted himself to the study of politics, and all his hopes and fears were centered in that engrossing pursuit. One Wednesday evening he was sitting smoking in his chambers, deeply engrossed in a blue book, when he heard a gentle knock on his door.

"Come in!" he shouted, thinking it was his man, and again buried himself in his book.

The door opened and shut quietly, and he still read on, and then suddenly looked up. There, standing in a dejected attitude, was the wreck of what had been a lovely woman. Graves sprang to his feet, his face pale and stern, for, in front of him, was his justly divorced wife.

"You!—Bertha!—Here in my rooms!" He moved over to the bell.

"Don't ring it!" she wailed; "I watched your servant go out, and wanted to speak to you, ah, so badly!"

"Now look here, Bertha—you dragged my name in the dust—you nearly ruined my career, and now, when you have been justly punished, you come back. What do you want?—money?"

His tones were icy in their coldness, and the weak, degraded creature before him shivered as she heard the last words.

"Cyril—I've no right to come to you, I know, but the world is so cold and wretched to a woman, and God alone knows how low I've fallen. Cannot you take me back?" She sank into a chair, and began to cry silently.

"Take you back!" he cried, his eyes glittering with fury, whilst, with uneven strides, he paced the room; "take you back and become the laughing stock of London! What! Go and rusticate in some dreary hole until you left me again? You forget what you are."

The insult lashed fresh life and spirit into the cowering woman.

"And who made me what I am?" she said, with her color rising, and her breath coming and going rapidly.

"Not I," he replied, with a sneer.

"If not you, who did? When you first men me at my father's rectory I was as simple-minded a girl as any in the land. You made me marry you—did you not?" Her tone was insistent.

"Well—suppose I did?" he answered, gloomily.

"You took me to a dull house in this London town, and there you left me. Night after night you went to your political meetings and to your House of Commons, and gave me what was left of your time. You fed me and clothed me, it's true, and there it ended. You encouraged me to mix in society, and never troubled to protect me as you should have done; and then, when I left you, more from heart sickness and from a desire to be loved and petted by some one than from any other cause, you divorced me, and received the condolence of your friends. Bah!—you are the man who is responsible for my ruin, and you only. Money! I scorn your money, and never until I die will I trouble you again."

She left the room abruptly, leaving Graves a prey to the most conflicting emotions. Her indictment was, he felt, only too true, and a feeling of shame came over him.

He unlocked his safe and took out his will, and read it slowly through, then took a sheet of paper and wrote rapidly, and replaced both in the safe.

"There!" he said. "I shall never marry again, and if I die before her, who knows, it may make a difference if she has the control of money. If I could only have my time over again!"

The great debate was over, and Cyril Graves was its hero. Secure in the self-reliance that a thorough knowledge of his subject gives its possessor, he had held the House spellbound for over an hour, and sat down amidst a chorus of approving cheers. In the lobby his friends crowded around him with hearty congratulations, and, already, in his mind's eye, he saw that his days as an obscure private member were over. The larger life of a leader of men, with all its brilliant possibilities, seemed to lie open before him, and he gloried in it.

To quiet down his overstrained nerves he took his hat and coat, and, although it was long past midnight, made his way to the Embankment, a favorite walk of his when engaged in deep thought. There was a full moon and the night was very still, and, lost in reverie, he leant over the balustrade, and gazed idly upon the glistening, silvery river below him.

The utter peace and and quietude of the scene soothed him, and he was just about to leave when a heavy hand was laid upon his shoulder.

"Don't do it, sir—think over it," was muttered in his ear.

He turned sharply, and found a policeman looking at him with commiseration.

"Good God! constable, you don't think I'm going to jump in the river, do you? Man alive! Can't any one walk on the Embankment without doing that?"

"Aren't you Mr. Graves, the member for East Bucks, sir?" said the man

"Yes, I am; we had a hot debate at the House, and I strolled here to cool down before turning in. How did you know me?" queried Graves.

"Lord bless you, sir, I'm a Bucks man myself, and a stanch supporter of yours. But don't ee, sir, come here again like this; it ain't safe, for we call it one of the most risky beats in London. We get down here men as are desperate for want of food and shelter. I believe half the bodies they fish out of the river come from along here."

There was such a feeling in the man's tone that Graves was touched, and felt in his pocket for some money.

Suddenly, eighty yards up, he saw a figure outlined against the sky, and then disappear with a loud shriek and a splash.

An awful cry of "Help!" echoed through the still night air.

"Good God, sir, a woman's gone in and I can't swim a stroke," groaned the policeman. "What shall we do?"

"Do?" said Graves, "I'll go in myself. Get on the pier below here, for the tide will bring us down, and you may be able to lend a hand."

Whilst he spoke he tore off his boots, slipped off his coat and trousers, and stood for an instant on the balustrade looking for the suicide.

"Help! help!" she shrieked, coming once more to the surface. With a muttered prayer Graves dived into the water. Coming up, he shook the water from his head and eyes, and with a long, graceful side-stroke made for the sinking woman.

All his faculties were keenly awake; he felt that power, life, and reputation itself were nothing to the delight of saving some despairing creature from a terrible death. The policeman cheered him on with hearty shouts, and he spurted just in time to clutch the woman by the hair. To his horror he say that it was his cast-off wife.

"Let me sink!" she gasped.

"Never!" he said, between his teeth. "You said I was responsible for your fall. I'll not be so for your death. Put your hands on my hips and I'll do all I can; don't struggle, but kick out when I do. Come, Bee," an old, old diminutive of fond days, "try and live."

The woman did as she was told, and, perhaps, loved and reverenced him more in those few minutes than ever she had before.

With dogged pluck Graves put forth all his strength, but he knew he was failing. His breath came and went in great gasps, and his arms felt like lead; an awful desire to rest came over him, which the woman seemed to guess.

"Let me drown, Cyril; save yourself," she said.

"It's all right, sir," shouted the constable, "a few more strokes and I can help you."

It was too late, however, for even as the man's friendly hand closed on the woman's dress Graves fell back exhausted and sank like a log.

* * * * *

A woman, whom all the night policemen know and respect, haunts the foul places of London, night after night, relieving and comforting the lost of both sexes.

There is an unknown benefactor who gives royally to the homes and shelters of outcast London, and who never tires of giving.

And one day a woman, whose good deeds will never be chronicled by man, will enter the workhouse utterly destitute, and will await in meekness and quietude the call that will terminate her chequered career forever.—St. Paul.

Newspapers' Stability.

A question that was frequently asked was: "What will become of the Sun now that Dana is dead?" The inquiry is based on a mistaken idea. A great newspaper is far more than an individuality, no matter how eminent its editor may be. It is an accretion of years and of effort in many departments, and when it reaches the first rank has passed far beyond the limits of a single personality.

The great newspaper is in some degree the creation of the public itself, who, appreciating its firm principle and intelligent championship of the right, make it their forum. A journal of this high order and broad influence is interwoven with current history, and has a perpetuity like the tide of human life. When it loses a laborer of exceptional ability the event is deplored, but the paper goes forward without missing a step.

One day's issue of a newspaper is the work of many brains and hands. Like an army, it needs a general. Like an army, it survives a general, and, as the chain of human affairs is unbroken, so the continuity of a leading journal is preserved.—Globe-Democrat.

Nothing Remarkable.

Smith—Hear about the fire over on the west side this morning? Nine persons barely escaped with their lives. Remarkable, wasn't it?

Brown—I fail to see anything very remarkable about it.

Smith—Why not?

Brown—Well, suppose they had escaped without their lives—then it would have been truly remarkable.

HOMES IN HAWAII.

OPPORTUNITIES OFFERED IN THE ISLANDS.

Some of the Farm Crops that Can Be Profitably Grown—Educational Facilities—Description of the Beautiful Scenery—The Musical Kanaka.

Seek to Be States.

San Francisco Correspondence:

Much as has been written concerning Hawaiian scenery, it is a subject about which literature can never be exhausted. People of all nations and of all climates are still continuous in their praise of the tropical verdure and scenery that can be found in the midst of the Pacific Ocean. There has been resident in the Islands for some time a Scotchman—Mr. Charles H. Ewart, of Dalbeattie, Scotland—whose soul was moved by the beautiful vision which he describes in the following poetic language:

"We are in an amphitheater of mountains, rising to an altitude of 3,000 and 4,000 feet, with a glowing raiment of leaf and blossom from base to summit, save in spots where the red earth peeps through the radiant curtain, as a foil to the flames of iridescent greens, and the fire of the blossoms that have enfolded the hills in their shining embrace. Here and there a pinnacle where no plant has found grace to grow, stands out a purple silhouette against the soft blue of a topaz-tinted sky. Caves and fissures are cleft in the steeps of these mountain walls, and torn from the nearly perpendicular cliffs which surround it, alone and apart, stands a pillar of stone twenty yards wide at the base, nearly a thousand feet high, and pointing 'Godward through the blue,' like the spire of some mighty cathedral. This monolith carved and fashioned by some bygone convulsion of nature when the hills 'glared at heaven through folds of fiery hair,' is swathed in a glorious garment of green and gold, chequered with the rose and the azure of the bells of the convolvuli that dangle from the cordon of vines that engird it."

The valley in the early morning may be clear of mists, and a soft mountain breeze murmuring among the foliage, but at times it is filled with the noiseless ebbing and flowing of white vapor borne in from the sea, and out of this shimmering sea of mist the towers and minarets of the mountains arise clothed with mosses and ferns, and draped with garlands of eddying vines, that cover the faces of the cliffs, and droop over the edges of giddy precipices in "cataracts of bloom," till they are swallowed up in the "White mists that choke the vale, and blot the sides of the bewildered hills."

Although sugar cane is indigenous in Hawaii, little attempt was made toward its cultivation until 1835, when a plantation was started at Kauai, and several sugar mills were built. These mills were worked by the aid of mules and oxen, and the process was slow and laborious. What a contrast to the mills of the present day, where the cane is taken and made into crystals of sugar. There is no royal road to wealth in Hawaii, and any one who anticipates such a condition had better stay away. No man can go about blindfolded and pick up dollars in the streets, but no country offers a better opportunity and final reward for honest, earnest and constant labor. Especially is this true in the coffee industry. The pretty homes and coffee areas of Olaa are an evidence of this.

Butter is selling in Hilo at $1 a roll. It is quoted in San Francisco at 16 cents to 24 cents a pound. There every field is as dry as a bone. In Hawaii every field is perpetually green. The dairy business offers a much better opening than any line of merchandising. And as a by-product to the dairy, hogs will pay magnificently. Pork is retailing at 25 cents a pound. The advertising columns of the local papers tell a curious story of the strangely backward condition of some of the smaller industries. "Ex Australia: Peaches, plums, oranges, apples, grapes, nectarines, lemons, celery, cauliflowers, potatoes, cheese, roll butter, crab apples, quinces, onions. "These are imported from a country over two thousand miles distant.

The Hawaiian Inspector General of Schools, Mr. Henry Schiller Townsend, speaking of the educational system of the islands, says that the population of the Hawaiian Islands is small and the school system is necessarily small. The total population exceeds one hundred thousand slightly, of which fourteen thousand were attending school at the end of last year. Ten thousand were in the public schools. Fifty-six per cent. of all the children attending school at that time were of native Hawaiian descent, and twenty-five per cent. were Portuguese. The remaining nineteen per cent. represents a large number of nationalities.

HAWAIIAN HARBOR.

The English language is practically the only language as a means of communication or instruction in the Hawaiian schools. And here lies the difficulty of the work. Just imagine the teachers of California trying to teach the children of that State through the Arabic language. Yet English is probably as difficult for the children of Hawaii as Arabic for those of California. History, literature, natural science and even arithmetic, must be taught under great difficulties. Educative instruction under these conditions is a well nigh unsolved problem. But conditions are rapidly changing. The English language is coming into use as a means of communication among the graduates of the common schools, many of whom have no other language in common. Thus it is creeping into the homes of the people, even. When the children learn even crude English from their mothers, the teacher's task will be much simplified. For many years there have been schools in Honolulu and Hilo especially adapted to the needs of the children of English speaking parents. Lately similar schools have been opened in a number of other locations, and still others will be opened shortly. These are not essentially different from schools of similar grade in America. A regular public high school is in process of organization in Honolulu, the greater number of the departments being already in working order. The endowed institution known as Oahu College has long offered full preparation for any college in America, and many of its graduates have entered leading American colleges on advanced standing.

But the English-speaking children do not enjoy a monopoly of the privileges of education beyond the common school course. The Kamehameha schools, with their magnificent equipment and no less magnificent endowment, are open to those of native Hawaiian blood and to no others. Manual training and industrial education are leading features of these schools, and few similar schools in America are so well equipped for work on these lines.

The natives are very found of music. The guitar on account of the softness of its tone, is their favorite instrument. The royal Hawaiian band, which a few years ago made a tour through the United States, was composed of native Hawaiians, all of whom were accomplished musicians.

BUNKO MAN'S LATEST GAME.

Working a Trick on Conductors Whereby He Clears $3.95.

To an honest man it would appear that the field of bunko had been pretty well worked out; but every little while some ingenious and crooked gentleman contrives a new method of making other persons pay for his ingenuity. Just at present the street railway men are looking for the deviser and operator of a very slick game of which the car conductors are made victims. The requisite for this game is $6 in $5 bill and a $1, and its working does not require great nerve, as the bunkoer, if caught, can always declare that it was a mistake, and to prove the contrary with legal certainty would be almost impossible.

The crook gets on a car and tenders the conductor a $5 bill. Now, no conductor wants to give up all his change and leave himself short, and no conductor will take a $5 bill if there is any way of getting out of it. Therefore, he looks at the crook's bill and says:

"Is that the smallest you've got?"

"I think it is," says the crook. "Wait a minute and I'll see."

Crumpling the bill up in his hand—the game is usually played with crisp new bills, as they crumple more obviously—he goes through his pockets in search of change. Not wanting to find any, he doesn't find any.

"Sorry, but that's all I've got," he says.

Thereupon the conductor, with inward wrath, seizes the crumpled bill, jams it into his pocket, and gives change. Not the original crumpled bill, however, for during the search for change he has contrived to substitute a new $1 bill, equally crumpled, for the $5, and the conductor, in nine cases out of ten, doesn't think to unroll and examine the bill which he has just seen to be $5. At the end of the day's work he discovers that he is $4 out. Should he discern the substitution, the crook simply says:

"Why, that's queer! I thought it was a five I had all the time."

And what can the conductor do?—New York Sun.

Old Trees in Great Britain.

Some of the oldest trees in the world are to be found in Great Britain. The tree called William the Conqueror's oak in Windsor Park is supposed to be 1,200 years old. The famous Bentley and Winfarthing oaks are at least two centuries older.

The greatest bore we ever knew thought he was the most popular man in town.

Anecdote AND Incident

Daniel Webster when in full practice was employed to defend the will of Roger Perkins, of Hopkinton. A physician made affidavit that the testator was struck with death when he signed the will. Webster subjected his testimony to amost thorough examination, showing by quoting medical authorities that doctors disagree as to the precise moment when a dying man is struck with death—some affirming that it is at the commencement of the disease, others at its climax, and others still affirm that we begin to die as soon as we are born. "I should like to know," said the opposing counsel, "what doctor maintains that theory." "Dr. Watts," said Mr. Webster, with great dignity. "The moment we begin to live we all begin to die."

A week ago a major of the Victoria Guards died and was given a military burial. The regiment is a crack one, and we went to see the procession. When the mournful pageant was over we stood thinking of the solemn scene—those sad-faced men, the reversed arms, slow tread, sad music, and touching sight of flag-draped coffin, and unused helmet. Some one touched my elbow and said: "Was the dead gintleman anythin' to ye, ma'am?" "No," said I, smiling in spite of myself. "Ye looked so sorry, I was full sure he was somethin' to ye," she continued disappointedly. "He was a human being, and a brave soldier; that should be something to all of us." "Yis. Yis, to be sure. But wouldn't it be grand, ma'am, mournin' for a man like that, supposin' he was somethin' to ye."

When Joseph Jefferson's oldest son was a child the family lived in a quiet, exclusive neighborhood in New York City. Master Jefferson, being a true boy, joined in play with the other boys in the street. One lady who was very particular as to with whom her children played admonished her boys for playing with a stranger, saying: "I don't know that Jefferson boy. Who is his mother?" "We don't know who his mother is," was the reply, "but his father works in a theater."

Two Irishmen were cleaning a window in a tall building. To facilitate their work they had stuck a board out of the window and Pat stood on the end of it which was outside and Mike on the end inside to balance. Suddenly Pat shouted: "Moike, I've dropped me sponge." "Thot's all right. I'll go down and git it." When he got to the street he found Pat in a heap on the sidewalk and exclaimed: "Well, well! How did yez git down here so quick, Pat? I ran all the way down, but bedad yez hov beaten me."

Sir Walter Scott had his share of curious experiences shortly after being called to the bar. His first appearance as counsel in a criminal court was at Jedburg assizes in 1793, when he successfully defended a veteran poacher. "You're a lucky scoundrel," Scott whispered to his client when the verdict was given. "I'm just of your mind," returned the latter, "and I'll send you a maukin"—namely, a hare—"the morn, man." On another occasion Scott was less successful in his defense of a housebreaker, but the culprit, grateful for his counsel's advice, gave him, in lieu of the orthodox fee, which he was unable to pay, this piece of advice, to the value of which he (the housebreaker) could professionally attest: First, never to have a large watchdog out-of-doors, but to keep a little yelping terrier within; and, second, to put no trust in nice, clever, gimcrack locks, but to pin his faith to a huge old heavy one with a rusty key. Scott long remembered this incident, and thirty years later, at a judges' dinner at Jedburg, he recalled it in this impromptu rhyme:

Yelping terrier, rusty key,
Was Walter Scott's best Jedburg fee.

An English paper tells of a clergyman who had two curates, with the older of whom he was at swords' points. On being appointed to another living, he decided to take with him the younger curate, whom he liked, and when he came to preach his farewell sermon he chose as his text: "Abide ye here with the ass, and I and the lad will go yonder and worship."

MOTHER LOVE IN SNAKES.

A Marked Exhibition of It Seen by a Naturalist.

Even the cold-blooded and clammy snake evinces maternal affection, and I am fortunately able to produce evidence corroborative of this statement that is fresh in my memory. On March 29, while seated on my front porch, I noticed one of my dogs, a yearling puppy, acting in a peculiar way on the lawn. He was circling around a small, circumscribed spot, every now and then thrusting his nose towards the ground, and then quickly jumping back.

On approaching the animal I discovered that the object of his playful assaults was a bunch of snakes, a three or four year old mother and her last year's brood of young. The day was very warm, the sun shining clear and bright, and these creatures had emerged from their old den or nest in the ground, a foot or so away from the spot where they were lying, and were sunning themselves. When they observed me they made an attempt to regain their nest. I killed two of them, however, before they could enter. I had read somewhere that if a snake's young were taken and their bodies dragged along the ground, the mother snake would follow the trail, and if found alive she would conduct them back to the nest. I took two which I had killed, and, after dragging them along the turf, deposited them on the pavement some fifty feet from the den; I then resumed my seat on the porch and awaited developments. In a short while the mother snake emerged from the nest and, after crawling about for a second or two, struck the trail and at once followed it to the pavement and her dead young. Fortunately I had a witness in the person of my iceman, who was delivering ice at the time, and who was dumfounded at beholding such high intelligence in a creature so low in the scale of animal life. I killed the old snake (for these snakes—garden moccasins—become harmful after the third year, eating young birds, etc.), and ten of her progeny, leaving two pairs to carry on and perpetuate the race.

A VERY QUEER CLOCK.

Made of Willow by a Basket-Maker—Ten Years at It.

It is a common experience, says the Jeweler's Circular, that in many branches of industry, outsiders without any acquaintance with that particular branch sometimes compose works of unusual artistic character. This is quite frequently the case in the art of horology; ingenious men, who understand nothing about watch making and its fundamental principles, succeed in constructing, aided only by their ingenuity, an artistic clock that challenges the admiration of the world. The latest addition to this list has just been made by a simple basket-maker, one Schulz of Aichach, Upper Bavaria, who manufactured a clock of willow braiding, perhaps the only one of its kind extant. The clock on which he worked for about ten years, is seven feet six and a half inches high. The going work contains thirty-four wheels, the teeth of which are of hardwood pegs, braided in. The pendulum, of willow braiding, is six feet six and a half inches long; the principal dial, also of braiding, has a diameter of thirty-three and a half inches. It indicates central European time, while four smaller dials around its circumference point New York, St. Petersburg, Madrid and Athens time. The big dial also has sixty-one small dials, each with a separate index indicating the date, with day stated on a little plate in the center of the dial. Over this calendarium are represented the different phases of the moon, which are visible upon a silver disc of the moon. The work is crowned by an automatic figure which motions away each escaped minute by a polite flourish with its hat. The movement also has a chime of 32 bells. The clock is actuated by a weight of twenty-five pounds, and the chime of bells by one of fourteen pounds. The latter is also regulated by a fairly large windfly. The movement has a free escapement without balance wheel and has no case; each wheel is visible. The whole clock weighs 248 pounds, and its price is $1,250.

Attacking a Wildcat.

How savage and wanton a wildcat may be is shown by an experience with a miner in Josephine County, Oregon, had last summer, and which is reported in a local newspaper. The miner, whose name is George Fendall, has a camp on Beaver Creek, and one evening he happened to return to it just in time to see a monster wildcat entering the hut, evidently bent on rapine.

The cat sneaked in, peered round, and not finding a man, pounced with great fierceness on an overcoat which hung on a nail. Whether the animal had some notion that a man was within the coat, or attacked it because he knew there was not a man in it, no one will ever know; but he certainly bit and tore it with fury, and being of great size, while the hut was small, presented a most formidable picture to the man crouching at the door.

Fendall, however, was far from being awed by the animal. He proposed to avenge the insult to his wearing apparel. Watching his opportunity, he picked up a long and heavy iron bolt and attacked the wildcat from behind. One well-directed blow laid the monster out, stunned; and before he could rally, Fendall had finished him with an ax.

This was a bold feat, for if the first blow had failed to stun the animal, Fendall would have stood, with the bolt as his only weapon, but a very poor chance of escaping serious injury.

Queen of Servia's Jewels.

The Queen of Servia, who spent the summer at Biarritz, was so unfortunate as to lose some more jewels. It will be remembered that she lost a diamond ring last year. This time it was a parure of diamonds. A few days later an advertisement appeared in the local papers to the effect that if the jewelry were returned to the Queen she would present it to the poor of Biarritz. Two days afterward she received her lost or stolen diamonds by post, accompanied by a sheet of coarse paper, on which was scrawled in printed characters: "I shall be curious to see if a Queen can keep her word." The Queen did keep her word, and presented the restored trinkets to the Sisters of Charity, who started a mammoth subscription list, and a poor little seamstress in some way became the fortunate possessor of the jewels.

Burglary at a Prison.

Burglars broke into Holloway prison, England, recently, ate up the remains of the Governor's supper, emptied his larder, drank his beer, leaving the tap running, and carried off such of his household effects as they cared for. The burglary was not discovered till the women servants arose in the morning.

Stop! Women,

And consider that in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience in treating woman's diseases is greater than that of any living physician, male or female.

You can talk freely to a woman when it is revolting to relate your private troubles to a man; besides, a man does not understand, simply because he is a man.

MRS. PINKHAM'S STANDING INVITATION.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read, and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman. Thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Out of the vast volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has relieved thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.

THE FAMILY STORY

...PAYING A DEBT...

STILLMAN GRANT had come to the end of his tether and he knew it. He made no fuss about the matter, and any of his freinds who met him that evening could not have told from his manner that anything was wrong. Grant had taken big chances to increase his fortune and now he realized that the jig was up. Exposure might come in a week, or it might be delayed for a month, but it was sure to come, unless he had £1,000 in hard cash, and that amount he knew he could not get. Of course if exposure could have been staved off for some years everything might come out all right; old Monckton might die and young Monckton come into the business.

Old Monckton, Grant's employer, was a hard-hearted skinflint who would have no mercy when investigation showed that his assistant was a defaulter. He was hard, even to his own son, and it wasn't likely that he would show mercy to one who was no relative of his.

On the other hand Stillman Grant, who was a calculating young fellow, had many times helped young Monckton when in trouble of a monetary nature. He did this not because he liked the young man particularly, but because he was his employer's son and would some time come into the business.

Young Monckton owed Grant money, but even if he paid it all that night it was not enough to cover the defalcation, and so was useless.

Grant had taken the money, not in any momentary weakness, but because he calculated he could make himself a rich man by the use of it. These calculations turned out to be erroneous, and for months Grant had been exercising his ingenuity to stave off exposure. He had not deluded himself with any false views as to what would happen when exposure came. He had made up his mind. There should be no trial with imprisonment at the end of it. He knew an easier way out of the difficulty than that. He had bought a quantity of morphine which he knew, when the time came to take it, would insure him a swift and tolerably easy death. He knew that six or seven, or perhaps ten years' imprisonment was the penalty for his offense and he had no desire or intention of facing such a punishment.

He walked that night to his rooms overlooking the Thames embankment. He went to a cupboard and spent some time in choosing with particular care a bottle of wine he intended to drink. He poured out a small draught of the beverage and taking the paper of morphine he opened it carefully and sprinkled the white contents on the surface of the wine. He watched it as it slowly settled and finally disappeared in the liquid; then he poured another glass of wine and drank it off. There was no hurry about drinking the poisoned cup; he had all the night before him, so he drew his comfortable arm-chair up to the fire and sat down wondering who would find his dead body in the morning. At last taking up the poisoned glass he paused for a moment with it in his hand, thinking he heard a step on the stair. The next minute his surprise was a certainty as someone rapped at his door. Hastily putting down the glass, he shouted, "Come in," forgetting the door was locked; then he rose hurriedly, drew the bolt back and opened the door.

"Hullo, Charley," Grant said when he saw who it was. The son of his employer entered with a radiant look on his face.

"Well, Stillman, I have come to secure my debt to you. I have made up my mind that you shall not suffer by my having borrowed money from you."

"Oh, that's all right," said Grant carelessly, "I don't need the money."

"No, I know you don't need it," said Monckton, "but it struck me that if anything happened to me my father would never acknowledge the debt and you would be out of just that much."

HE WATCHED IT AS IT SLOWLY SETTLED.

"It doesn't really matter, you know," said Stillman Grant in the same unconcerned voice. "I shall always be happy to lend you money when you need it and I have it."

"Thanks, old fellow, I know that," said Young Monckton. "You are as generous as the old man is stingy. Nevertheless, I got a windfall the other day and the minute I received the money I thought of you."

"Ah," said Grant, with his eyes brightening somewhat. "How much was it?"

"Five hundred pounds in one lump," answered the other.

"Oh," said Grant in a disappointed tone.

"You don't congratulate me," cried young Monckton. "Five hundred pounds are not to be scoffed at."

"No," replied Grant; "still £500 isn't a fortune, you know."

"It isn't, but it might be turned into a tidy sum of money. Now let me tell you what I have done, Grant. I know I will never be able to pay you that sum of money; if I became a partner in the business it might be different, so I took part of the £500 and insured my life for £2,000, making it payable to you at my death. If I live I will evenutally come into the business and then you will get back the money you have lent me with handsome interest; but if I am cut off in one of my sprees, which is more than likely, then you will get back all your money with interest at several thousand per cent."

As the young man said this he drew from an inner pocket what Grant saw was evidently an insurance policy.

"There you are, my boy, with the first year's premium paid," said Monckton, as he threw the policy on the table. "I'll leave it with you, because you are a steady, sober fellow. If I can't pay the next premium when it falls due you'll pay it for me and charge it up to the account I already owe you. You see, my friend, you are quite safe as far as your money is concerned, whether I become a staid, respectable and rich man of business, or whether I am cut off in the flower of my youth."

Grant lay back in his chair with his eyes partially closed as he picked up and examined the document. He saw it was all right and perfectly legal. At last he said, in a low tone and with deliberation: "I think you might have spent your money much more profitably, Monckton, than in paying a year's premium on your life. Bless me! you will live till you are 90."

"I hope so," said the young man, "but meanwhile you take care of that document, and if the time ever comes that there is money collectable on it you are the man who is to have it. As you see, I have made the policy solely to you."

"Thanks, old man," said Grant, as he placed the policy on the table.

"Well," said Monckton, "I must be off. Won't you come out and take a drink?"

"I think not," said Grant; "I'm busy to-night, but if you wish a drink, have a glass of wine with me."

"I don't mind if I do," said young Monckton.

Grant pushed towards his the glass of wine in which he had sprinkled the morphine, then he poured out wine for himself in another glass. "Here's to you," he said, drinking.

Young Monckton drank off the wine and smacked his lips after. "That has a curious taste, Grant," he said; "what is it?"

"Oh, it is a special brand I drink when I am not sleeping well. You will find it very soothing."

"Well, good night, Stillman, old fellow."

"Good night to you, Monckton, and pleasant dreams."

"Oh, I'm not going to dreams yet awhile," said Monckton. "A few of us are to have some games at the Raquet Club."

"Ah," said Grant, "that's a long distance from here. Better have a hansom. Come, I'll see you out."

They walked down the stair together and at the door young Monckton said: "Yes, I think I will have a hansom. I feel rather drowsy."

"Oh, you'll be all right when you get into the fresh air," rejoined Grant. The young man staggered slightly, as if he were intoxicated. The other watched him go down the street and hail a cab.

"Poor devil," said Grant to himself, as he turned away. "He was an unlucky chap to come in at that moment on that particular errand. There is a time for everything, and that was not the time for insurance policies. I suppose that, not having premeditated the murder, I have left some loose clew that will enable the police to trace the thing to me. Still I shall be no worse off than I was an hour ago, and after all, nothing matters very much. Bet a fiver I'll be caught."

But he wasn't. The medical men said the young fellow had died of a disease with a long name, and then the insurance company claimed it had been defrauded by the fact of his having the malady concealed from them. Thus was the honest man defrauded out of his insurance money, and he was nabbed by the police for his defalcations before he could purchase more poison. In one of her Majesty's prisons he now regrets the fate of his friend.—Detroit Free Press.

TAMED HER UNRULY PUPIL.

Thrashed Him and His Sister and Expelled Them Both.

There is one young school teacher in Long Island who need never be out of a job. So completely did she succeed in quelling a rebellion last week that offers from other places have already been received, but the school directors will not hear of her departure. Her name is Ella Hart, and here is how she came to establish herself so firmly in her present position:

John Coleman, who is a boy of tender years, but tough tendencies, has for several days been living under the shadow of the rod. Miss Hart has an official whip, and Friday her experienced observation told her that John Coleman was ripe for castigation and she called him up to receive his due. The operation proceeded with complete success for a few moments. Johnnie Coleman gave all the evidences of mortal anguish customary to such occasions. He squirmed and twisted and rended the air with lamentations, protestations and ejaculations of penitence.

Stella Coleman, a stout girl of 16 years, sister of Johnnie, heard the wails of her brother and appeared as a rescue and punitive force. She dashed into the room like a young whirlwind and attacked the teacher with a rush. The boy took advantage of the diversion to rub himself a few times where he felt that rubbing was necessary and salutary and then joined in the attack. Miss Coleman scratched vindictively and reached for her teacher's hair. Miss Hart proceeded methodically and according to the most approved principles of pedagogics. She first captured the girl's hands and then tripped her up, threw her and sat on her. Then she reached for her whip and thrashed Miss Coleman until all the fight and most of the family affection were thrashed out of her. After that she caught Johnnie Coleman and began on him all over again.

Having completed her work conscientiously and thoroughly, she expelled both the offenders and appeared before the trustees, scratched and somewhat battered and disheveled, but triumphant, and reported her action. She was sustained and the school will probably continue its exercises peacefully.

Clever Repartees.

A local preacher, being anxious to interview the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, called at his house, but was informed by the servant maid that the great preacher was engaged. "Tell him," said the caller, "that the servant of the Lord wishes to see him." "Ah!" replied Mr. Spurgeon, "tell the servant of the Lord I am engaged with his Master."

A conceited fellow, with some pretensions to literature, once traveled some distance by rail with much egotistic converse. The author of "Les Miserables," having arrived at his destination, was about to leave the train, when his interlocutor said, "You may perhaps like to know who I am. I am Victor Hugo." How odd," remarked the real Hugo, "so am I."

The schoolman Duns Scotus was dining with the French king of his day, when the latter jokingly said, "Duns, can you tell us the difference between a Scot and a sot?" "Just the width of the table, your Majesty," was the prompt reply.

Louis Philippe of France introduced to the Duke of Wellington one of the French marshals whom he had beaten in the Peninsula. The Marshal partly turned his back to the Duke, which greatly displeased Louis Philippe, who apologized to the Duke for his Marshal's rudeness. "Forgive him, sire," said the Duke. "I taught him to do that in the Peninsula."—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Stung by Cactus Plants.

Several men employed about Horticultural Hall, in Fairmount Park, are nursing very sore hands, and one of them is just sure that he is out of danger from blood poisoning from stings received in handling prickly cactus plants. All summer the tall, slender cacti have stood with soldierly erectness in a bed at the east end of the hall. When frost threatened the head gardener gave orders for their removal into winter quarters, and the men having the job went about it without the usual precaution of wearing buckskin gloves. They were stung in many places by the needles that bristled from the stalks, but as the pain at the time was not great, they kept at work until all the cacti had been housed. A few hours later their hands began to puff up, and soon swelled to ungainly proportions, as the poison of the stings took effect. They suffered intensely for several days, and even now, after a week has elapsed, have to use their hands in a very gingerly manner indeed.—Philadelphia Record.

Fog and Gas.

Prof. Lewes of London states that London fog deprives coal gas of 11.1 per cent of its illuminating power, and an incandescent burner loses 20.8 per cent of its efficacy. The reason given is that the spectrum of these lights approaches very nearly that of the solar spectrum, being rich in violet and ultra violet rays. These are the rays which cannot penetrate a London fog. This is thought to be the reason why the sun looks red on a foggy day. The solid particles floating in the aqueous vapor of the atmosphere absorb the violet rays and only the red rays of the spectrum pass through. It is further stated that the old argand burner more successfully resists a London fog than any of its later rivals.

The hotel clerk who puts on a brilliant front is not the only pebble. A great many newspaper men use paste too.

There is always room for one more oyster in the soup.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Labor.—God did not give labor as a burden to humanity, but as a boon.—Dr. L. A. Crandall, Baptist, Chicago, Ill.

Death and Life.—If this life be a dream, it is not too long. If death be the "awakening," it does not come too soon.—Rev. C. W. Williams, Baptist, Denver, Colo.

Light.—If the children of light were only as wise in their generation as the children of darkness, they would not "hide their light under a bushel."—Rev. J. P. Brushingham, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

Consolation.—Our heavenly father chastises those whom he loves, and never are we so secure of eternal life as when we meekly receive from his hands the cup of bitterness.—Rev. P. J. Flaherty, Catholic, Philadelphia, Pa.

Exclusion.—No man, no people, can live unto self. The walls of exclusion must down, the boundaries of sect, class and creed must away, if we are to march onward and upward.—Rabbi D. Philippson, Hebrew, Cincinnati, O.

The Slums.—When the cities tear down the slums and build healthy dwellings for all, when they give work to every starving woman and every idle man, then they will be Christian cities.—Rev. Dr. W. D. P. Bliss, Methodist, Boston, Mass.

Afflictions.—Affliction makes heaven more glorious and adds stars to the crown. Our present light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work out for us an eternal weight of glory.—Rev. Theodore H. Compton, Baptist, Louisville, Ky.

Stand Your Ground.—The Bible is a good sword in practical life. Never mind about the sheath. Wield the everlasting steel. It is better than somebody's opinion. Above all, stand your ground.—Rev. William Rader, Congregationalist, San Francisco, Cal.

Truth Will Survive.—Drop a few seeds of truth under any piled-up wrong, no matter how entrenched in popular favor. Sow them under the institutions that are respectably veneered and bide your time. There will be an explosion some day.—Rev. C. L. Kloss, Congregationalist, Kansas City, Mo.

A Crying Need.—The crying need of the world is more Christlike men. We have knowledge enough and theology enough, but these will not save. Remember, we are not saved by what we think or believe of Christ, but by what we have of Christ.—Rev. Dr. Harcourt, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Harvest of '97.—Each year brings its own new harvest of questions. True souls must bring their answers. The same brawn that lifted the flail to the crop of 1896 and made the chaff fly shall make all the barn floor rattle with the threshings of 1897.—Rev. Dr. M. W. Stryker, Presbyterian, New York City.

The Christ Current.—Electricity was always floating in the air. Only recently have we found a wire to make it light our homes and help our work. Jesus is the living wire to bring to us an unbroken currents the cheer and power of God.—Rev. Dr. Charles L. Thompson, Presbyterian, New York City.

How the Visitors Saw Tennyson.

V. C. Scott O'Connor contributes to the Century an article on "Mrs. Cameron, Her Friends, and Her Photographs." The following new anecdote of the late laureate is told:

Mrs. Cameron's house at Freshwater, the rendezvous of many distinguished men and women, was in some sort the refuge of many whose heart's desire it was to know Tennyson. No one she could help was ever turned away; none willingly would she have left "out of the feast of life." With Tennyson she was on terms of friendly intimacy, being in her relationship with him, as in all other matters, a law unto herself. She could, and did, say anything to him, though always within the limits set by high-bred feeling and a heart that was never at fault. One day some American acquaintances of hers, visitors at Freshwater, went up to Farringford in the expectation of seeing Tennyson. But soon after they returned to Dimbola with a rueful tale of disappointment. "Oh, he won't see you?" she said. "Come with me!" And thereupon hastily throwing on her shawl, she took them straightway to Farringford, entered the open hall door, and marched them into the drawing-room, where Mr. Tennyson and his wife were seated. "Alfred," she said, "these strangers come from a far country to see the lion of Freshwater; and"—waving her hand—"behold—a bear!" Tennyson, ever gentle with his friends caught her direct humor, and broke into a hearty laugh, receiving his visitors in the kindliest manner.

Leprosy in France.

At the international congress of leprosy, which has just been brought to a conclusion at Berlin, the startling fact was elicited that the disease is very prevalent in France, especially in the northern districts thereof, and that it is on the increase. This discovery and the data furnished by the French medical authorities contributed in no small measure to the resolution voted by the Congress to the effect that leprosy is contagious.

Health Value of Hobbies.

A well-known doctor is convinced of the health value of a hobby. He says: "If you cannot find pleasure in the study of the very many wonders that surround you, if you care not for geology, natural history or astronomy, collect walking sticks, buy and cherish old and cracked china, fill up albums and scrap books, or even gather together autographs and postage stamps, anything sooner than be idle."

There is a large class of people in the world who do not care whether you are moral or not, so long as you make a big pretense of it.

BLACK AND BLUE.

Black and blue colors are not subject to fashions this season nor in any season. They hold their own and will not wash out. They are pretty solid colors, and but for the misery of wearing them, might become fashionable. Some men take pride in wearing them as tokens of their profession, as soldiers do their scars. But bruises, black or blue, or both, ought to have immediate attention, for under them may be a nerve hurt or a muscle badly wrenched. A black and blue bruise is a bad thing, not only from its tender soreness but the contused blood is prevention of regular circulation. While sore spots like these will not wash out, there is something that will rub them out in no time, and that is St. Jacobs Oil. It is peculiarly adapted to their quick cure. A pennant can be won only by hard knocks, with scars and bruises, but after the ball is over, if any remain, this one cure is the best. Bruises come from contusion in all avocations, and it is well to remember at all times just what will cure them the best.

The Poetry of Nature.

"The poetry of earth is never dead," wrote Keats, and though the statement sounds at first thought a dangerously sweeping one there is no doubt that if he had been called upon to argue the point he would have successfully maintained his thesis. Regarded subjectively, the poetry of earth, or, in other words, the quality which makes for poetry in external nature, is that power in nature which moves us by suggestion, which excites in us emotion, imagination or poignant association, which plays upon the tense strings of our sympathies with the fingers of memory or desire. This power may reside not less in a bleak pasture lot than in a paradisal close of bloom and verdure, not less in a roadside thistle patch than in a peak that soars into the sunset. It works through sheer beauty or sheer sublimity, but it may work with equal effect through austerity or reticence or limitation or change. It may use the most common scenes, the most familiar facts and forms, as the vehicle of its most penetrating and most illuminating message. It is apt to make the drop of dew on a grass blade as significant as the starred sphere of the sky.

Merely descriptive poetry is not very far removed from the work of the reporter and the photographer. Lacking the selective quality of creative art, it is in reality little more than a representation of some of the raw materials of poetry. It leaves the reader unmoved, because little emotion has gone to its making.—Charles G. D. Roberts in Forum.

A Baked Bonnet.

During a recent rainstorm a society woman was caught in a sudden downpour and was compelled to run home in very undignified haste. Her dignity, however, wasn't damaged as much as her bonnet. The latter had been a dream of beauty when she started out. It was a perfect nightmare when she reached home again. She thought that a little heating would bring it about all right. The kitchen fire had gone out, but she put the bonnet in the oven and prepared to build the fire. Just as she had got all the materials together the doorbell rang. It was a caller. The visitor was a great gossip, and she had a brand new bit of scandal to tell. The two women became very much absorbed in their chat. During the course of it the servant girl, who had been out for the afternoon, returned and passed back into the kitchen. About an hour later the two gossips in the parlor began to notice a queer odor coming from the kitchen. The truth of the situation suddenly flashed upon the hostess, who immediately rushed out into the kitchen. There she found to her horror that the girl had built the kitchen fire and her lovely bonnet lay in the oven roasted to a crisp.

THE CUBAN SCARE.

Although the diplomatic entanglement with Spain over Cuba is to some extent influencing the stock market, Wall street expects no serious complications. Nevertheless serious complication with other maladies may be expected to follow an attack of biliousness which is not checked at the outset. The most efficacious means to this end is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, an admirable remedy, moreover, for dyspepsia, malaria, kidney trouble, constipation and nervousness.

THE HOSTETTER CO. WINS ANOTHER CASE.

Infringements on their Bitters not Tolerated by United States Court.

The United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, Judge Townsend presiding, handed down an opinion December 23d, 1897, granting injunction and accounting, in the suit of The Hostetter Company against Isaac Sommers and Louis Joseph, for infringement of its Trade Mark. The jurist states in bold and clear language, the rights accruing to the Hostetter Company, and the liability incurred by all who would rob them, by fraud or misrepresentation, of the well-earned reputation and profits of a business built up by the efforts of half a century. The judge says, in part:

"The complainant is entitled to protection against the appropriation of its trade mark, by any and all unfair and dishonorable means, and a court of equity has power to grant such protection whenever it is satisfied that an attempt has been made by ingenious subterfuges, to invade the rights of an owner of a trade mark. * * In the sharp contest between the individual manufacturer, who strives to acquire and retain the fruits of industry and honesty, and the field of keen rivals, seeking to wrest from him the prize of the public goodwill, the inventive ingenuity of the infringer has conceived a great variety of devices for evading the established rules of fair dealing. * * Courts of equity finding that their ultimate object and effect were to enable and induce the retail seller of a fraudulent imitation to palm it off on an unsuspecting public for the genuine article, and thus to contribute to the infringement upon the rights of the original owner, have not hesitated to apply the remedy."

AN OPEN LETTER TO MOTHERS.

We are asserting in the courts our right to the exclusive use of the word "CASTORIA," and "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," as our Trade Mark.

I, Dr. Samuel Pitcher, of Hyannis, Massachusetts, was the originator of "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," the same that has borne and does now bear the fac-simile signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on every wrapper. This is the original "PITCHER'S CASTORIA" which has been used in the homes of the mothers of America for over thirty years. Look Carefully at the wrapper and see that it is the kind you have always bought, and has the signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on the wrapper. No one has authority from me to use my name except The Centaur Company of which Chas. H. Fletcher is President.

SUPERIOR COURT PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Wm. R Berger, deceased—J. L. Boland appointed administrator.

What has become of our local athletic club?

J. R. Moffatt went to Big Pine this week.

The postoffice at Keeler has been discontinued.

A party of Big Piners are prospecting on Oak Creek.

Miss Mary Mulholland is visiting at George's Creek.

S. E. Vermilyea of Bishop was in town last Tuesday.

Miss Lena Vagt is visiting friends in the neighborhood.

Dave Holland expects to start for the Klondike this month.

S. Newlon was down from Bishop this week on court business.

A new custom stamp mill is being erected near Mojave.

Mrs. D. J. Hession took a flying trip to Keeler Wednesday.

G. H. Lewis and Sallie Payne of Mojave have been licensed to marry.

Crom Harper, the chief factotum of Rhine's store, is taking a short vacation.

Mrs. J. C. Irwin returned last Tuesday from a visit to Mrs. J. J. Gunn at Minnietta.

O. I. Mairs left for Los Angeles last Friday and expects to be gone about two weeks.

Charley Robinson and Lester Laird have gone on a prospecting trip across the Inyos.

Mrs. George Willis returned home Wednesday from an extended visit to Bishop.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Big Pine have changed the date of their bazaar to March 18.

Judge Davidson is about again after a sharp tussle with his old enemy—the rheumatism.

Rhine's corn mill at the pavilion has been kept pretty busy since it started up some three weeks ago.

The rock crusher at the Reward mill broke down last Tuesday. It is now in running order again.

An epidemic of la grippe has struck George's Creek and several people are bedfast in consequence.

Miss Nellie Reynolds is about to open an Indian school at Camp Independence, in the employ of the Government.

Chas. Rose, the urbane deputy county clerk, has returned from Bishop, where he has been on some cattle business.

Mrs. D. J. Hession returned last Friday evening, after a pleasant week's visit among friends and relatives at Big Pine.

Miss Oro Eldred stopped over a day in Independence this week while on her way home to Big Pine from Oakland via Mojave.

Mrs. Shaw of Big Pine will return to that place tomorrow. She has been staying with Mrs. Hession for some time time past.

"Dad" Showalter, Lew and John Schalter came down from Big Pine last Monday after a shaft from the old Kearsarge mill.

Mrs. J. G. McLean and children left Lone Pine this week to join Mr. McLean in British Columbia. Paul Z. Howard accompanied tuem.

A rich strike of galena, carrying about $60 in gold to the ton, was made at the Reward mine last week. The ore body is of good size, and will last some time.

The instruments for the weather bureau arrived Monday, and are now being adjusted. In the course of a week or ten days Observer McLean will be furnishing genuine official weather to the Inyoites.

Chas. Anthony of Darwin, by his attorneys, P. Reddy and P. H. Mack, has commenced an action in the Superior Court against Frank C. Young and seven other defendants, to quiet title to certain mines, millsites and water in Panamint.

A Big Pine Wedding.

Yesterday the Rev. Thos. H. Nicholas officiated at a very pretty wedding at Big Pine, the contracting parties being Miss Bertha Pariridge of Big Pine, late of Liberty, and Mr. William R. Deans. A number of friends were present, and the happy couple were the recipients of a number of valuable presents.

The Barstow Smelter.

The mining enterprise of most importance to the industry in a large region of Southern California is the prospective fifty-stamp custom mill, smelter and cyanide plant at Barstow, San Bernardino county, the planning of which was recently mentioned in this column. The development of many new mines and the larger and more profitable working of many others will result. The establishment of similar plants by capitalists is badly needed in other districts of the State. Regarding the new enterprise the San Bernardino Times-Index says:

"The fifty stamp mill at Barstow is an assured fact. The contract for the erection of a steel-framed building and the placing of fifty stamps, together with a complete smelting outfit and cyanide plant capable of handling at least 500 tons of ore per day has been let to the Colorado Iron Works of Denver. The material is on the road and the plant will be in operation on or before May 1 of this year.

"The contract for the grading, etc., for side tracks has been let to Ramish & Marsh of Los Angeles, and they will begin operations at once. They expect to have the lower track done within a week when the materials for the mill, which are now on the way, can be hauled in and unloaded and work prosecuted on both the upper track and mill at the same time. Water for the plant will be pumped from the Mojave river to a large reservoir on top of the hill, from which it will be piped down. This will give ample pressure for use in case of fire as well as for all other purposes. The company figures on using about 250,000 gallons of water per day. With their fifty stamps they will be able to handle 250 tons of ore per day, while with the smelter and cyanide plant they can work fully as much more.

"This is by long odds the biggest piece of McKinley prosperity that has struck this section. It will enable mine owners who have not sufficient capital to put up mills to have their ore worked and get their money for it at once, as the company will be prepared to pay cash on the spot for everything brought in.

"It will put hundreds of teams and teamsters to work hauling ore to the railroad stations from mines which are located a few miles away from the railroad. It will put miners to work digging out the ore. It will give employment to hundreds of men at the mill. All these people must have clothing and provisions, and the merchants of the country will be benefitted to that extent. In fact, there are dozens of ways in which the people will be benefited by such an enterprise.

The Santa Fe Company will work in harmony with the owners of the mill and will make such low rates on ore that the very low grades can be shipped from Arizona and even Nevada and milled at a profit, while the owners of the mines in the desert have a Klondike brought right to their doors."

Jim Townsend asks this pertinent question: "If one man can sen the price of wheat up ten or fifteen cents, why can't Uncle Sam boost silver a little.

THE MAINE.

It is still a little early to state with any degree of certainty what will be the outcome of the Maine disaster. Although nothing of an official nature has been made public, it is known beyond dispute that the wreck was caused by an external explosion—whether by torpedo or mine is immaterial—and the facts all point to Spanish treachery.

The work of strengthening the coast defenses goes on as rapidly as possible; two more regiments of artillery are being raised; men are being enlisted in the navy at a fast rate; work on battleships is being pushed night and day; commanders of interior army posts have been ordered to hold their men in readiness to move on short on short notice, and many other preparations are being made to place the country on a war footing that shows the gravity of the situation.

Affairs are fast reaching a crisis, and in a few days the people will know whether or not we are to be plunged into a bloody war.

Randsburg Notes.

One local dealer asserts that he handles every month at least $1,000 of the placer gold brought into camp by the dry washers. As there are several other buyers of gold in the city it is quite a conservative estimate to put the total production of Randsburg placer gold at fully $5,000 per month.

A very rich strike was made on Butte avenue on Thursday of last week by the contractors who are excavating for the new pipe line which is to provide Randsburg with a water system for fire protection. In cutting the ditch a huge breaking plow was utilized and in its furrow was found some very rich ore, which proved to be on the "Q. C." mine. It was quietly leased on Monday in connection with two other adjacent claims, and all three are now being developed as fast as possible. The ledge frequently bears free gold as large as wheat kernels, and at this writing is about twelve inches wide.

The mayor of greater New York is a king, and has more patronage to bestow than many a royal potentate possesses, and is elected for four years. The city expenditures for that period will be $300,000,000. There will be more than 35,000 in the pay-roll, and salaries will exceed $35,000,000 a year. There will be 242 department heads to be appointed, with salaries ranging all the way from $5,000 to $15,000.

Mining men of experience predict that during the coming year great discoveries will be made. The country hereabouts has not been half prospected as yet. The Panamint and Slate range countries are practically unknown, although teams arrive at the mills with ore that has been hauled thirty to sixty miles that is of great richness and amply repays the long haul.

Among the many new papers started in California in the past year none are more worthy of success than the Los Angeles Review, a paper devoted to the mining interests of the state. Although only three numbers have been issued, it has already reached a standard of excellence that many older journals have failed to attain.

Wounded sailors of the Maine are crying for vengeance, but just where they may be expected to secure it is a trifle uncertain. Some of the Americans who were captured with the Virginius also cried for vengeance, but there is no official record showing that they obtained it. —Call.

A resourceful theater manager proposes to boil down Shakespeare's tragedies into twenty minutes each for use on the vaudeville stage. The Arizona man who objected to Hamlet because it was "shy on local gags and good dancing" may be happy yet.

It is said that 79,900 fools and 100 wise men are going to the Klondike this spring. The fools will work the mines and the wise men will work the fools.—Ex.

Bodie Wisdom.

Bodie Miner-Index: It would not surprise us to learn that the board appointed to inquire into the sinking of the Maine had concluded that she commited suicide.

The Examiner, always quick to see a chance to advertise itself, offers a reward of $50,000 for the arrest and conviction of the parties who blew up the Maine. Almost any Spaniard would sell his mother and all his relations for less money.

It is rumored that a scheme is being worked up to have the State prison convicts do the public printing. The person who conceived the idea should be barbecued. But if there is anything in the proposition why not go a little further on the economical trail and select the members of the Legislature from the list of jailbirds? There would be quite as much intelligence, and, as a general thing, more honesty.

News comes from Dawson City, under date of January 18, that scurvy has developed among the miners to such an extent that there are now seventeen cases in the public hospital. It is estimated that there are from twelve to fifteen cases in private cabins, swelling the whole number to thirty.

About the neatest thing in the line of special editions that has reached us in a long time is the mining number of the Redding, Shasta county, Searchlight. It consists of sixty-two pages, handsomely illustrated, and is well worth reading by all mining men.

J. Mills Davies, a well-known newspaper man, contemplates starting a daily newspaper at Randsburg.

Randsburg is putting on airs. The church-going element are trying to close up the theater at that place.

Since our last issue general rains have fallen throughout the State, and the hay and grain crop, it is thought, is saved.

John R. Turner came up from Lone Pine yesterday, returning today.

THE DAYS THAT USED TO BE.

Let me sing you a song of the rollicking days,
The days that used to be,
When the years were veiled in a misty haze
To which we would gladly flee.
When all was bright to our youthful gaze,
No intricate windings, no doubtful maze,
And on each lip a song of praise
That you were alive—and me.

No cross to sustain and no sorrow to bear,
In the days that used to be,
No deed too great for us to dare
When we rode our grandpa's knee.
No harrowing doubt, no chilling care,
No soul bowed down beneath despair;
Then life was happy and life was fair,
'Twas happy for you—and me.

Those gladsome days we live over again,
Those days that used to be,
When life was all pleasure without any pain,
A joyful mystery.
We hailed with delight each shower of rain,
For we knew that the sunlight would come again,
No grave in our hearts where lost hope was lain;
Then you were content—and me.

Press on, brave heart, through all your woes
And think of the used to be,
For there'll come a time when you'll conquer all foes,
And all life's misery.
When the soul is done with its earthly throes,
And into the haven it gladly goes
Then once again, as every one knows,
You'll surely be happy—and me.

BOUGHT AND SOLD.

"Can it be possible?" The words were spoken in an undertone, with a quick gasp for breath, and then the lady stood very still, looking down on the disordered drawer and the letters that lay on the top.

Little bundles of muslin and dimity, alternating with knots of faded ribbon and old lace, were scattered all around, for their owner had been searching among them for an old embroidery pattern; and so she had come suddenly upon the packet of old letters she had stowed away there more than two years before.

The letters were written by Mrs. Fleming's old schoolmate, Amy Norris, and the soft girlish handwriting spoke to her heart a whisper faint and tender from the olden time.

Dear Amy! She had been married three years before, and her station in life was far below that of Mrs. Fleming's; but the lady's eyes grew dim, as she unfastened the ribbon which, for two years, had held together those half-dozen epistles.

Amy's sweet face seemed leaning up close to hers once more, and she saw the old brick houses, with their sloping roofs, where they had lived in the days that would never come back again.

But, as the packet fell from the loosened ribbon, it disclosed two other letters, and these called forth the exclamation, and brought the sudden paleness to Mrs. Fleming's face.

She thought those letters were all turned to ashes long ago—that she had burned them on that terrible night when she buried away all the past. But now she saw how it was; in her haste and anguish she had mistaken the letters, and burned two of Amy's instead.

There was no one of all Mrs. Fleming's admirers to see her as she stood by the open drawer, her little fingers moving caressingly over those two letters; and it seemed almost a pity, for hardly ever had she looked more beautiful.

There was so much unstudied grace in her attitude, so much mournful pathos in her young face; and yet it was not best the world should read the story that until that hour had been written and rolled up and laid away in her own heart.

She had not seen his writing for two years; and yet how natural it looked! The bold, graceful capitals, the free, running hand, all had a language for her!

She knew, too, by the post-mark which letters these were, and when they were written—the first, so tender and loving, before he learned that she was about to be married to another—the last, wild and reproachful, afterward!

How she had loved that man! How the past came back to tell her of it! The old red brick house—how it loomed up in the distant perspective, amid the cool summer nights, when she sat under the old portico all grown over with sweet brier, and he sat there too!

But clearest and brightest and dearest of all stood up, in that world of old memories, the new home which they were to have.

It was to be a little white cottage, with green window-blinds and a small garden in front. How she had dreamed about it—and of the flower border running up to the steps!

What a happy loving wife she expected to be in that dear little cottage home—going every morning through a round of delicious household duties; for Harry could only afford to keep one domestic.

And in the late afternoons, when the table was all laid, with its snowy cloth, when she would put on a white muslin dress (Harry liked white muslin), and a few rosebuds in her curls, and she would go out and wait for him at the garden gate.

How his handsome face would light up as he came round the corner and caught a glimpse of her, and a moment later his strong arm would be around her waist, and his low, deep, "My darling Laura!" would be the sweetest sound earth held for her. And, as that quiet domestic picture came up to confront her, the proud, elegant Mrs. Fleming bowed her head on her hands and sobbed like a child.

Then she laid her fingers on the letters with a nervous, timid glance around the room, for the lady's heart whispered that she was doing wrong—that now she had no right to read them; and it was better to lay them in the grate yonder, where the fire was leaping up to fold them in its long, red arms.

"There can't be any harm in reading them over," she whispered, for her conscience needed a narcotic; "it is so long ago, and we shall never meet again."

So Mrs. Fleming opened the letters and read them. I cannot tell how they wrung her heart, particularly the last one, with its wild, frantic reproaches, and the love and the suffering so apparent through all.

"I was not so much to blame as you thought me, Harry," she murmured, as she laid the letter in her lap. "Our property was all melting away, and they told me that you had grown cold and worldly, and I thought I must, too. If the letter had only come the week before, I should not have been—what I am now."

And then she looked around that elegant chamber, and thought what she was now—a wife, bought and sold and paid for, in gold and lands and earthly grandeur. How the thought burned and festered in her proud soul as she sat there!

A wife, loved by her husband as he loved his horses, his dogs, and his houses; loved, but only because her beauty and her grace were the crowning glory, the chiefest ornament, of that magnificent home which was his soul's delight.

The lady looked around her luxurious chamber that morning with a sinking heart. The marble wash stands, the damask curtains, the handsome carpets, looking like a world of Damascus roses, scattered over a bed of snow, were worthy the wife of a millionaire.

And yet the mistress of all this wealth, sitting in her chamber, murmured to herself, "I wish he had never found me in the old red brick house where I was so happy! I wish I stood this very morning in the kitchen of the little cottage we were to have, and that, in a plain cotton dress, I was preparing your dinner, my Harry!"

"Please, ma'am," and the entrance of her maid was a harsh interruption to the lady's monologue; "Mr. Fleming has just sent home the new drab and pink satin for the party next Tuesday night."

Ah me! those old letters! If she had never read them! That party!—if she had never gone to it!

* * * * * * *

"You have not forgotten me, Laura! I read it in your blue eyes to-night."

Harry Atwood's voice had lost none of its old depth, as he leaned down his handsome head to Mrs. Fleming's as they stood together in an alcove of the conservatory.

Most of the company had left, for it was late, and they were quite secure from observation. Mr. Fleming was not a jealous husband, and he was quite content that others should admire his wife, so that he possessed her.

It was understood that Mr. Atwood and Mrs. Fleming were old friends, so they had nothing to fear from a prolonged tete-a-tete. They had suddenly, unexpectedly, met at the party, and the heart of either was not changed.

Harry Atwood had become a successful lawyer now, and the world honored him. He had forgiven Laura long ago, for he had heard she was more "sinned against than sinning."

"Harry—Mr. Atwood, I mean—I am very glad to meet you and find you looking so well."

The lady's voice was courteous and calm; but her fingers trembled as they played with the carved points of her ivory fan.

"Call me Harry, Laura, for the sake of old times," said he, "and look up to me once, and say you have not forgotten them. Oh, Laura, I have thought how the bright star of this evening's festival once rose over my heart, and then went down for ever. We cannot stay here much longer. Will you not grant me an interview to-morrow night—a private one—in your own house?"

"I cannot, Harry," she replied; "do not ask me. I am the wife of another now."

"And what harm could there be in our walking together for half an hour in your garden?" said Harry. "Your husband would not object to this, for I have watched the man narrowly to-night, and know him well. You could not refuse so simple a request to the veriest acquaintance. We have had many walks together, Laura, down by the old mill and past the meadow pond. Will you refuse me one now?"

He looked down on the fair face, and he saw that tears were on it, and he knew what the answer would be before it was given.

"You may come, Harry," she said.

* * * * * * *

That walk in the dim moonlight upon Mr. Fleming's beautiful grounds was followed by many another, for the first steps in the forbidden way are usually pleasant ones.

Poor Mrs. Fleming! She meant no wrong; and then she loved Harry, although she tried to conceal this from him; but when he talked of the past, in those low, tender tones of his, her tears would come; she could not help it.

One evening—it must have been more than a week after their first meeting—Harry told Mrs. Fleming that his heart was unchanged; that the old love still lived there—a sweet but mourning memory.

"Oh, Harry! don't, don't! You forget; I am his wife!" murmured the young creature, as she bowed her pale face on her hands.

Then the lawyer drew his arm around her waist, just as he had done in the days that were gone, and said, "You belonged to me first, Laura! Our souls were married before you ever took that false oath at the altar!"

He whispered to her of a flight to softer skies—of a home fairer than the one they had dreamed of in their youth—of a life that should be one long poem of love. That time she fled from him with a wild shriek of fear and horror.

They did not meet again for many nights. If during that time she had only remembered the prayer of her childhood, "Lead us not into temptation!" But she was so young; and then that affection was the one blossom her life had cherished in the midst of its sterile grandeur.

One night she was standing on the steps of her mansion, for she had just taken leave of some guests, when Harry Atwood suddenly sprang before her.

I do not know what was said by either party, but there were frantic gestures and wild appeals on one side, and a little later Mrs. Fleming was walking among her garden shadows with Harry Atwood.

This was repeated for several evenings, until one midnight a closed carriage rolled hastily away from the private entrance of Mr. Fleming's grounds. The next day his wife was gone!

What an electrical thrill it sent through the fashionable world—for her beauty and her rank had made Mrs. Fleming its especial idol.

She knew little of the censure and scorn that were heaped on her head in the quiet of that Italian home to which she was borne by the man who loved her only too well.

The world said Mrs. Fleming was happy there, but it was false. No woman can ever be happy who makes memory a remorse and love a crime.

But, dear me, how I used to smile when everybody made a parenthesis of pity in their anathemas on Mrs. Fleming—"Her poor husband and parents! My heart aches for them." And, sitting very quiet and listening, I thought, always, "Well, the one bought and the others sold her; and so they had their reward."—Saturday Evening Post.

BICYCLES AND SAVINGS.

How Bank Deposits Have Been Affected by the Purchase of Wheels.

I met the president of a prosperous savings bank in one of the minor cities of the Middle West on a railroad train yesterday, and we fell to talking about the ever-increasing popularity of the bicycle.

"Every one understands, of course," he said, "that the use of the wheel has come to be well nigh universal, and that millions on the back of millions of dollars must be invested in the silent steeds, but you can hardly realize to what an extent they are used unless you are placed in a position somewhat like mine. In a small town, like the one in which I live, the savings bank men may easily become personally acquainted with practically every depositor, and I make it a point to take full advantage of that circumstance. Consequently I am often advised concerning the financial affairs of our depositors, which, though intrinsically small, are of vast importance to them. This makes it all right for me to question depositors now and then about their savings.

"Early last spring I noticed that a number of mechanics who had long been in the habit of making regular deposits and who I supposed had steady employment became decidedly irregular in their visits to he bank. Others stopped depositing altogether, and still others, who continued to deposit regularly, put in less each time than formerly. Naturally, I began to make inquiries, and more than three-quarters of those I spoke to confessed that their surplus money was being used to meet instalment payments on bicycles, instead of finding its way to the savings banks. I suppose our bank's deposits must have fallen off some thousands of dollars from this couse, though I haven't taken the trouble to make a careful estimate. In the whole country instalment payments for bicycles must have decreased the total savings banks' receipts by very large amounts, though, of course, there have probably been compensatory deposits from workmen in bicycle shops in towns where such establishments are located."—Detroit Correspondence of the Boston Commercial.

Immigr tion from Euro e.

That we live in an age of wonder is proved by the bare statement of figures with regard to the immigration from Europe to this country during the present century. Statistics previous to 1820 were not kept, but it is estimated that between 1789 and the last named year the immigration from Europe to the United States did not exceed 250,000. In 1820 the Government began a systematic collection of data with regard to immigration, and from that time to the close of 1896 17,544,692 people came from Europe and were welcomed on our shores. These figures do not include the immigration to British America, to Mexico, Central or South America, but solely to the United States. The smallest number of immigrants during recent years was 177,820 in 1879, the largest 623,084 in 1892; in 1896 the immigration was 343,267. No such movement of population has ever been known in history. The migration of the German nations over the territory of the Roman empire did not comprise more than 4,000,000 of people and covered 400 years; the exodus of the Jews from Egypt was with 600,000 able-bodied men, or counting five to each family, about 3,000,000 of people. Compared with the exodus from Europe the depopulation of Goshen was a trifle.

The Largest Spiders.

In the jungles of Sumatra the largest spiders are found. Some of the larger specimens measure eight inches across the back, and have seventeen inches of leg-spread.

TELL HER SO.

Amid the cares of married life,
In spite of toil and business strife,
If you value your sweet wife,
Tell her so!

Prove to her you don't forget
The bond to which your seal is set;
She's, of life's sweets, the sweetest yet—
Tell her so!

When days are dark and deeply blue,
She has her troubles, same as you;
Show her that your love is true—
Tell her so!

There was time you thought it bliss
To get the favor of one kiss;
A dozen now won't come amiss—
Tell her so!

Your love for her is no mistake—
You feel it, dreaming, or awake—
Don't conceal it! For her sake,
Tell her so!

Don't act, if she has passed her prime,
As though to please her were a crime;
If e'er you loved her, now's the time—
Tell her so!

She'll return, for each caress,
An hundredfold of tenderness!
Hearts like hers were made to bless!
Tell her so!

You are hers, and hers alone;
Well you know she's all your own;
Don't wait to "carve it on a stone"—
Tell her so!

Never let her heart grow cold—
Richer beauties will unfold;
She is worth her weight in gold!
Tell her so!

Dreyfus' Wife.

Madame Dreyfus, wife of the exiled French army officer ,is convinced of her husband's innocence, and said in a recent interview: "As husband, father, soldier, friend, he has always been above reproach. Honorable, gentle, kind; his life moral, his conduct upright. I cannot, cannot understand it. I cannot understand why he, of all men, should have been made a mark for this frightful, odious charge."

MADAME DREYFUS.

Lives by Tuning Pianos.

Traveling around the country tuning pianos is the unique occupation followed by Miss Nellie Jay Hatch, a pretty and attractive young woman of Seneca, Kan. On graduation from the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston Miss Hatch received a diploma in piano tuning, and the course she took in order to secure it was both thorough and comprehensive. She was graduated in 1889, and since them she has traveled throughout the State of Kansas, actively engaged in her chosen profession.

Barred Because She Married.

Because she eloped and was married, Mrs. Sam Frazier of Crescent, a suburb of St. Louis, has been barred from attendance at the high school. Mrs. Frazier was Miss Gertrude W. Lewis. She is 17 years old and would have soon graduated had she been allowed to finish. As it is she will only be allowed to continue at school by special permission of the school board. The next day after marriage the bride went to school as usual. Her secret was too big for her to keep, and the new Mrs. Frazier told several of her schoolmates, under pledge of secrecy, of course, of her changed estate. Young schoolgirls are not expert secret keepers and the romance soon became the gossip of the school. It came to the ears of Principal Bryan. He called the blushing bride into his office and plumped the question fairly at her. She blushed and stammered, but she confessed that it was true she was married.

MRS. FRAZIER.

She Proved a Repeater.

It is not a generally known fact that the first place in this country where women were permitted to vote was at Newark, N. J. This occurred in 1807, and is the facts chronicled in Gordon's "History and Chronicles of New Jersey" be true, that experiment would not lead a pessimist to believe in woman's efficacy as an agent to purify the ballot. Here is what he says about that famous event:

"An election in 1807 for determining the location of the courthouse is still remembered by the inhabitants as the most exciting recorded in their annals. The contest was between Newark and Day's Hill. By a construction given to the State constitution, the women were then suffered to vote, and they seem to have been so delighted with this privilege of exercising their wills that they were unwilling to circumscribe it within the legal limit, many ladies voting, we are told, seven or eight times under various disguises."

New Footwear.

These shoes are the latest novelties. The high shoe in the center is for those who feel uncomfortable in a low shoe. It is cut out in scallops on either side, the lacing thereby revealing the stocking. The shoe at the top is an entirely novel cut, but is becoming to the foot, especially when worn with a colored stocking to match the dress. A glittering embroidery of jet outlines all the openwork strappings of the glace kid, which radiate from a narrow central strap, also wrought with jet. The model at the left laces from the toe right up to the ankle in such a way that the charms of a pretty openwork stocking are displayed to exceptional advantage. At the left of the circle is a dainty shoe in glace kid embroidered with jet. Note the pretty arrangement of the strap at the side.

Cost of a Wife in Fifty Years.

On the occasion of his golden wedding a methodical English husband figured up from his carefully kept accounts what his wife had cost him. He had an assured income of $2,500 a year throughout his life. Winning his wife, what with presents, engagement ring, and extra expenditure on his own personal adornment, cost him $500; her share of the household expenses was $625 a year; her clothing and linen cost $250 yearly; presents, medical attendance, amusements and summer excursions amounted for her share to $450 annually. He therefore spent for her in fifty years $66,750.—New York Sun.

Petticoats.

The petticoat next the gown is frequently as elaborate as the gown itself. It is made of taffeta silk, and trimmed with plaited flounces or ruffles of the same. It is cut with an umbrella flounce, which is faced and bound like the dress skirt. The smaller flounces are sewed to this. To be fashionable, it must match the lining of the gown, though the all-black silk petticoats are always in good style. Less expensive skirts are of watered moreen, and fine brilliant mohair lined. The latter will give far more service than the silk skirts, and may be made very dressy with silk ruffles.

Eye Cosmetic.

Spanish women use a simple cosmetic for their eyes which Lola Montez tells of in her book on beauty. They squeeze the essential oil from the skin of an orange into their eyes. The operation is a little painful but very successful, only it must not be repeated too often. If rouge is put on the top of the cheekbone it heightens the brilliancy of the eye just as certain colors lend a glow to the complexion.

The cutting of children's toe-nails is but little understood by nurses; and even mothers give but scant attention to this most important point. Never should a toe-nail be rounded like a finger-nail. The nails must from earliest infancy be trained to grow square, and never on any account be cut out at the sides.

Do not give a child too many playthings at one time. Such a practice tends to develop restlessness. Rather let her have but one, and when signs of discontent appear, show her some new way of playing with it. Her ingenuity and steadiness will thus be encouraged. A child should not, of course, be kept too monotonously with one plaything, if she has a number (variety is good for all, at times), but rather that error than the other; and, by all means, guard against her having a number at the same time. Rather let her play with one as long as she will. Then, before the second one is taken up, put the first one entirely out of sight, in order that it may come forth at some future day masquerading as a new toy.

Sarah an Abstainer.

Sarah Bernhardt is a total abstainer from all alcoholic drinks, and to this she attributes much of her wonderful energy and mental power. Her favorite beverages are milk and water.

CONTEST FOR VERDI'S HAT.

Clever Proceeding to Secure Possession of a Valued Souvenir.

The other day the Marquis Di Rudinì, arriving in Genoa from Monza, where he had been to confer with the king before the latter went to Germany, descended from the train, having twenty minutes to wait. He was met by the city authorities and the station master, with whom he spoke pleasantly, when all of a sudden from an incoming train Giuseppi Verdi stepped down. The station master, seeing him, asked permission to retire of Rudinì, who, having given it, looked in the direction in which he was going and himself recognized the great musician. Calling the station master back, he asked him to present him to Verdi, which he consented willingly to do. While asking permission to make the introduction he was followed by the premier, who, bareheaded, hat in hand, advanced with the greatest deference. The Marquis Di Rudinì expressed his pleasure at meeting the purest and most vivid glory of living Italians.

"Never, as to-day," he added, "have I felt so happy in representing all Italy. I congratulate you on your fine health, and wish you innumerable long years of life."

The maestro is as straight and sturdy as an oak, and his strength is remarkable for one of his years. This graceful incident was followed shortly after by a laughable little scene, which reminds one of the two guests at dinner, one of whom saw his companion putting a silver spoon in his pocket, which he decided to gain possession of himself. He began to boast of his cleverness at sleight of hand, and, in being invited to exhibit his skill, rose, took a spoon, put it in his pocket, and, with a flourish, said:

"Please examine the pocket of the gentleman opposite."

After taking leave of the premier, Verdi went to the station buffet, where, on returning to the train, he forgot his hat. A lady and a gentleman who had been watching the maestro all the time, jumped for the hat, but unfortunately arrived at the same moment, each seizing the brim, whereupon ensued a struggle of see-saw, the lady emerging triumphant, exclaiming: "Ah! now I have got, and now I intend to keep it."

At this moment a gentleman who had assisted at the conflict, with apparent growing stupefaction, stepped forward, saying: "But this is my hat." A loud laugh rang out from those present, in which the recent combatants could not help joining. But I leave their rage and chagrin to be imagined when, a few moments later, they discovered the trap into which they had fallen. It was the hat of the great composer.—Mall Gazette.

Milk heated to the scalding point and drank as warm as possible is a great stimulant for a person very weary or weak from exhaustion. It is much more nutritious than beef tea.

Some stomachs will not retain cod liver oil. Sweet cream is a highly recommended substitute, being a nutritious food which can be taken by those inclined to consumption or having feeble digestion, and also by aged persons.

A prescription is the personal property of the person paying for it. The retention of a copy of it by the druggist satisfies all the requirements of his business. The original prescription can always be claimed by the customer as his property.

Hard Plant to Kill.

There is a plant in Jamaica called the life plant, because it is almost impossible to kill it. When a leaf is cut off and hung up by a string it sends out white, threadlike roots, gathers moisture from the air, and begins to grow new leaves. Even when pressed and packed away by a botanist it has been known to outgrow the leaves of the book in which it was placed. The only way to kill it is by the heat of a hot iron or of boiling water.

The People of the State of California send greeting to Josephine Lichens, defendant:

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named plaintiffs in the Superior court of the county of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days, exclusive of the day of service, after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county, or if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain judgment foreclosing all your right, title and interest in and to all the following described State school lands of the State of California, situate, lying and being in the county of Inyo, State of California, towit: The W 1-2 of Sec 36, township No. 21 south, range No. 39 east, M D M. And canceling, annulling and henceforth rendering null and void the certificate of purchase thereto, No. 11,879, from the State of California, for non-payment of interest amounting to $156.80, due and unpaid to the said State of California on the first day of January, 1896, upon said State school lands and the certificate of purchase thereof, aforesaid, then and now unpaid and delinquent, for two dollars cost of publication, ten dollars attorney fee, and for costs of suit and for such other and further relief in the premises as the case may require, and as to the court may seem just and equitable, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, said plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Superior court of the said county of Inyo, State of California, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1896. D. J. HESSION,

Seal Clerk.

P. W. Forbes, Attorney for Plaintiff.

NOTICE OF FORFEITURE

TO MRS. J. STILLMAN: You are hereby notified that I have expended ($500.00) three hundred dollars in labor and improvements upon the three lodes or veins in the mining claims known as Hidden Treasure, Golden Treasure and Bunker Hill, S W of Anville Springs, about a mile, in Bute Valley, South Park Mining District, Inyo Co., Cal., as will appear by certificate filed about the 20th of December, 1897, in the office of the Recorder of said county in order to hold said premises under the provisions of Sec. 2324, Revised Statutes of the United States, being the amount required to hold said claim for the year ending in 1897, and if within 90 days after this notice by publication you fail or refuse to contribute your proportion of such expenditure as a co-owner, your interest in said claim will become the property of the subscriber under said section 2324.

Summons

In the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California.

The People of the State of California, Plaintiffs, vs.

John Bamber, defendant.

Action brought in the Superior court of the county of Inyo, State of California, and the complaint filed in the said county of Inyo, in the office of the clerk of said Superior court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to John Bamber, defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiffs in the Superior court of the county of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days, exclusive of the day of service, after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county, or if served elsewhere, within thirty days.

The said action is brought to obtain judgment foreclosing all your right, title and interest in and to all the following described State school lands of the State of California, situate, lying and being in the county of Inyo, State of California, to wit: All of Section 36, Township No. 18 south Range No. 38 east, M.D.M. And canceling, annulling, and henceforth rendering null and void the certificate of purchase thereto No. 11,343 from the State of California for non payment of interest amounting to $134.40, due and unpaid to the said State of California on the first day of January, 1896, upon said State school lands and the certificate of purchase thereof aforesaid, then and now unpaid and delinquent, for two dollars cost of publication, ten dollars attorney fee, and for costs of suit, and for such other and further relief in the premises as the case may require, and as to the court may seem just and equitable, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, said plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Witness my hand and the seal of said Superior court of the said county of Inyo, State of California, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1896. D. J. HESSION, Aprons.

Women have taken to the apron again. This is well, because nothing makes a woman look more at home in her own apartments than a dainty little apron. Our grandmothers would as soon have thought of leaving off their capes or dainty collars and cuffs as their black silk or alpaca aprons in the house. The modern apron is not so somber an affair as it was in those days. The more useful and less expensive ones are made of fine lawn and trimmed with a little embroidery or lace of dainty pattern. Others are made of bands of white or colored satin ribbons put together with lace insertion, straight up and down, crossways, or diagonally. A full frill of lace all the way round, bows on the pockets and ribbon strings give the finishing touch.

"It is perfectly astonishing," said a beautifully gowned woman at the apron counter in a big store, "how these little aprons save one's skirts, and women generally are wearing them now. No matter how many servants a woman keeps, she always has certain precious possessions that she likes to dust or care for in some way herself, and that's where these little lawn aprons come in. Then I find that the lace and ribbon aprons are a great comfort when I'm doing fancy work, making afternoon tea or cooking something in the chafing dish for my spoiled boys when they come in late at night."—Exchange.

Ribbon Sashes.

Ribbon sashes are worn in various widths. From 3 inches to 10 or 12 describes the limit each way. The excessively wide styles once popular are not used this winter, and the very broadest sashes are of transparent texture. A sash that is not too wide and that falls to the skirt hem is as a rule far more becoming to the wearer than the one that is half length. Of course a very wide sash cannot be tied at the side. An innovation that has little to recommend it is a half length ribbon sash tied in this position.

HAWAII AND JAPAN.

Despatches from Washington state that there are about to be important developments in the Japanese imbroglio with the government of the Hawaiian Islands. However this may be, certain it is that the disturbance of the stomach caused by simple indigestion will develop into chronic dyspepsia unless checkmated at the start. The finest stomachic is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which promptly rectifies gastric trouble, and does away with irregularity of the bowels and liver.

MISTRESS OF THE HOUSE—My good man, did you ever take a bath? TRAMP—No, mum; I never took anything bigger'n a silver teapot.

We are asserting in the courts our right to the exclusive use of the word "CASTORIA," and "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," as our Trade Mark.

I, Dr. Samuel Pitcher, of Hyannis, Massachusetts, was the originator of "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," the same that has borne and does now bear the fac simile signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on every wrapper. This is the original "PITCHER'S CASTORIA" which has been used in the homes of the mothers of America for over thirty years. Look carefully at the wrapper and see that it is the kind you have always bought, and has the signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on the wrapper. No one has authority from me to use my name except The Centaur Company of which Chas. H. Fletcher is President.

He Won the Day.

Dr. John Bachman, a beloved minister in Charleston not much over 20 years ago, was fond of music. Moreover, he had an excellent means of managing a church choir, one which other clergymen might use with good effect.

In his early student life the singing was very bad in the old church of which he was a member. He set to work with the zeal of youth and the enthusiasm belonging to his own character to reform this undesirable state of things, and having mustered a large class procured a singing master to lead it.

The congregation soon began to take delight in the result, and Bachman watched his class with great satisfaction, not at all alloyed by the discovery that his own voice proved neither true nor sweet, though it was a most agreeable one in speaking.

But his choir was not flawless. Its members fell out, and one Sunday when the pastor gave out the hymn an ominous silence reigned. John Bachman waited a moment in deep anxiety. Then, with his ever present and self forgetful desire to help, he rose in his seat and began to raise the tune.

That was enough. The singers smiled and chimed in by one consent as lustily as if they had no greater desire than to drown his willing but discordant voice. He smiled also and gave them the floor, and never did he cease to enjoy the situation.

"My class was afraid of my bad singing," he would say to his grandchildren, a humorous look stealing into his eyes. "So I won the day."—Youth's Companion.

Good Friends.

In a cavalry troop there generally grows up between each horse and his rider a strong bond of sympathy and friendship. Soldiers in the cavalry service are in most cases stationed at remote western posts, where, far from home and friends and as a rule unmarried, they are necessarily very limited in their social pleasures and amusements. On this account, perhaps, the propensity for having pets of various kinds is very strongly developed and increases the sense of fellowship between the horses and their riders. Cruelty or inattention to the wants of their horses is a rare trait among cavalrymen, and even should this be the case from the feeling of proprietorship cruelty from one soldier to the horse of another would be resented as an injury to the owner himself.

This comradeship is more in evidence upon a long march or while in the field engaged upon arduous or dangerous duties. On such occasions, when forage often becomes scarce, cavalry soldiers will jealously guard every grain that their horses receive, and should the sergeant through carelessness or prejudice give a trifle more or less to one than the other it often provokes a vast deal of grumbling, so closely is the trooper interested in the welfare of his horse.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Foy and the Lunatic.

Eddie Foy, the comedian, spent a summer vacation at his old home in central New York. One day as he was strolling past the large insane asylum that stands on the outskirts of the town he was startled by a low "Hist!" and on looking up saw one of the worst heads that ever came under his gaze peering over the wall. Eddie was not frightened, for he did not think the maniac could scale the wall, but he quickened his pace. He had proceeded but a short distance when he heard a scrambling, and on looking saw that the madman had climbed over the wall and was following him. Eddie walked fast, but the maniac, who was an immense fellow, with a face that wore a demoniac look, walked faster. Foy trotted a little, and the madman trotted after him. Eddie finally broke into a run and was horrified to see that his pursuer was not only running also, but was gaining steadily. Eddie is not much of a sprinter, but on this occasion he made remarkable time, but soon Foy could hear the labored breathing of his pursuer and felt that he could make no further effort. Just as he was about to faint from exhaustion the maniac reached forward, touched him gently on the shoulder and said: "Tag! You're it."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Shoes For Social Evenings.

Young women who contemplate participating in the pleasures of society this winter will do well to give especial study to their footwear. Nothing is more admired than a shapely foot incased in a stylish shoe. Where the material renders it possible it is a good plan to have the evening slipper made to match the color of one's gown. When this cannot be done, have your gloves and shoes to match, of kid. The evening shoe is cut very low down over the instep, not altogether for comfort, but partly to display the embroidery supplied to this part of the stocking. Slippers cut extremely low have a single strap across to prevent spreading across the shoe. The slippers have rounded toe, but the design of the bead embroidery is in the old razor pointed style once seen in the shoe itself. Self colored embroidery has been abandoned for the contrasting tints. Even black silk stockings have lost their somberness with touches of vivid red, emerald green, pink or yellow embroidery. White embroidery is used on black stockings by those who do not care for brighter colors.—New York Journal.

SCIENCE AND INVENTION

A glass plate will return to its exact original form after being kept under pressure in a bent condition for twenty-five years. Glass is the most perfect elastic substance in existence. Steel ranks next.

Berthelot, the French chemist, finds that the copper objects found at Negadah and Abydos, in Egypt, are of pure copper, not bronze. They are believed to date from the first dynasty or earlier, and tend to prove the past existence of a copper before the bronze age.

A Dutch chemist in Java claims to have discovered a process by which starch may be converted into sugar at half the present cost of sugar. The two substances are composed of the same chemical elements, yet it remains to be proved that one can be profitably turned into the other.

Sawdust building bricks are coming into use in many parts of this country, where the raw materials are plentiful. The sawdust is dried and screened, to remove the coarser particles, and then mixed with cement, lime, and sand. The mixture is pressed into blocks as hard as ordinary bricks.

A microscopic examination of mother of pearl shows the shell to be made of very fine lines so closely put together that the white light is broken up into its prismatic colors and we get the so-called "play of colors." Taking a careful cast of such shell, the wax cast will yield the same prismatic effects.

Prof. Ehret of Washington has invented a system for cooling rooms in summer. It is simply a tall cylinder of galvanized iron resting in a large basin or pan, and connecting at the top with the ordinary stovepipe or with a tube leading out of the window. In the top of the cylinder's interior is a perforated tubular ring, and on a cock being turned on this ring an artificial shower is caused inside the cylinder. The water thus flowing down the sides takes a rapid spiral motion, which sucks the air down through the cylinder at a rapid rate, a fine spray inside cooling the air thus entering, reducing its humidity to normal and taking out all dust and bad odors; the water collects in the basin below, from which it is drained off, the cool air escaping through openings just above the water surface of the basin.

In the Black Hills there is a natural telephone line operated without wires, poles or receivers. On each side of a valley twelve miles wide stand two tall peaks, several thousand feet high, and so rocky that they have been scaled only a few times. Some weeks ago a party of tourists decided to make the ascent, and they divided into two parties, one for each peak, taking heliographs with them for the purpose of signaling to each other across the valley. The ascent was made, and one of the party on the north mountain was surprised to hear voices, which apparently came out of the air. He moved his position, and the sound was no longer heard. By changing his position several times he discovered that the voices were those of his friends on the other mountain. When the attention of the opposite party had been attracted it was found that an ordinary conversation in an ordinary tone of voice was plainly heard from one mountain top to the other, over a distance of more than twelve miles. Scientists say that the cause is to be found in the form of the mountains, which serve as elliptical reflectors of sound, a vast whispering gallery made by nature.

VILLAIN AND LADY.

Despite Her Remonstrances He Persisted in Pulling the Trigger.

Rapidly closing and locking the door, the Villain turned to the Fair Lady.

"At last!" he exclaimed.

She looked around in dismay. The room was at the top of the house, and it was useless for her to scream for assistance—no one would have heard her.

"I have been long waiting for this," he said. He chuckled sardonically; his hand grasped his deadly weapon.

"This is cowardly. You have entrapped me. You told me that from this room was to be obtained the finest view in all England."

"The finest view in all England," he replied, with a profound bow, "is actually in the room at this moment."

"If you think that I have beauty," she faltered, "why destroy that beauty? I am too young to die."

He laughed again, as though she had spoken in jest. "I long," he said, "to gloat over the inanimate features that——"

"Coward! Coward!" she cried, and once more looked for some means of escape. Ah! There was another door, immediately behind her. She opened it, and hesitated, for within all was absolutely dark.

"Enter," he said, "by all means. It is but a small room, with no window to it, and no door but this. You cannot escape—you are in my power. Enter if you will, but be careful lest in the darkness you knock against anything and hurt yourself."

"Would you care?" she asked, bitterly.

"I could never forgive myself—never."

"How dare you say it—you—you, with your hand already on the trigger?"

"It is stronger than I. I cannot help myself—I must do it. Prepare."

With a long sigh she sank on a low couch and buried her face in her hands.

"Do not do that," said the Villain, almost tenderly. She made no reply. There was silence in the room for a moment, and then he spoke again:

"I cannot do it unless you take your hands from your face."

"Then I will keep them there forever."

"In that case," he replied, coldly, "I will wait." He took a cigarette from his case and proceeded in a leisurely way to light it.

To do this he had put down his weapon. Watching him narrowly between her fingers, she saw her chance and made a sudden rush. But it was of no avail—he had snatched up the weapon again before she could secure it. Once more she flung herself on the couch and covered her face.

"You know," she said, "that I detest the smell of tobacco."

"A thousand pardons," he replied, as he flung the cigarette through the open window. "I had been misinformed, and certainly you carry a silver match box."

"That is only for my bicycle lamp."

"They always say that," he said, meditatively. "However, I can wait just as patiently without smoking. I am not a slave to the habit."

There was once more a moment's silence. She changed her position restlessly. Suddenly she sprang up and stood erect, letting her hands fall by her side.

"Go on," she said. "If it must be done, let it be done quickly. Get it over. Do your worst."

She looked superb as she stood there—a graceful figure in the sunlight. In her eyes there was an infinite kindliness, as though she bore no malice against her persecutor. Now, just at the end, she smiled.

He saw it all unmoved, without wavering for one moment from his fell purpose.

"That's magnificent," he cried, as, raising his camera, he pulled the trigger and photographed her abominably.—Black and White.

Not a Bit Superstitious.

No, I am not superstitious
I consider it pernicious
If not absolutely vicious
In a man
To admit himself so small that he must scan
Every little sign and omen
As the menace of a foeman.
Still, I'm free to say that Friday
Never, never would be my day
For a venture, for I'm sure 'twould never hit,
Though I am not superstitious, not a bit.

Really, I've no toleration
Of that nervous hesitation
And that irksome perturbation
Which I've seen,
When a dinner party chanced to be thirteen.
Why, I've seen that arrant folly
Make a whole crowd melancholy,
With their whining and their flimsy,
Foolish reasons for the whimsey.
Still, I own I hate to be the last to sit,
Though I am not superstitious, not a bit.

Certain things may be propitious,
Though they seem but adventitious,
And it's hardly superstitious
To perceive
Which is which, and so, accordingly, believe.
Now there's nothing makes me sadder
Than to walk beneath a ladder,
But I grow a good deal bolder
When the moon is at my shoulder.
And to spill the salt! It takes away my grit,
Though I am not superstitious, not a bit.

Surely nothing can be clearer
Than that evil marches nearer
By the breaking of a mirror,
And it's true
That a howling dog in night-time makes me blue,
For his keen scent makes no errors
And he smells the King of Terrors.
Here's another thing. Take heed, sir,
If your nose should start to bleed, sir,
And should bleed only three drops and then should quit!
Though I am not superstitious, not a bit.

It is sad to see what uses
Some folks make of vain excuses
Rather than admit abuses
Of the mind,
When they're rather superstitiously inclined,
Just to put it in plain English;
It would seem they can't distinguish
Between false and foolish cases
And the few which have a basis
In experience, which even I admit,
Though I am not superstitious, not a whit!

Cause of Office Drowsiness.

"Some men are quite martyrs to office drowsiness," a physician remarked the other day. "Any monotonous sound near them, the hum of traffic outside or even the scratching of a clerk's pen is sufficient to induce a feeling of sleepiness which it is almost impossible to resist. The worst of it is that this symptom is seldom regarded as anything serious, though I have known it to be the beginning of critical mental trouble. Far more often, however, it is merely the effect of constitutional eccentricity, though in either case a few simple remedies might be tried with advantage.

"For instance, I always advise the old indigestion cure—a glass of hot water—when the feeling comes on. To keep the eyes tightly closed for three or four minutes and then bathe them in very warm water often gives relief at once. Another good idea is to lower the head for a few seconds to a level with the knees. Above all, one should never give in to the feeling of drowsiness by taking a short nap in the hope of waking up brighter after it. At the same time the condition of the office might be looked to. The slightest defect in ventilation will often cause one man to be affected by office drowsiness, even though other people in the same room feel nothing of it whatever."—London Tit-Bits.

Valuable Autograph Collection.

One of the largest collections of autographs in Connecticut is owned by William L. Ransom of Litchfield. In his selection he has confined himself mainly to the pen written letters and portraits of the members of the provincial congress, the signers of the Declaration of Independence, the Presidents of the United States, Senators and Representatives of Congress, Supreme Court officials and famous army and navy officers. He has the autograph of every President. Mr. Ransom found that Andrew Johnson's autograph was the most difficult to secure, from the fact that Johnson wrote little, and when he did write used a lead pencil instead of a pen.

Goethe the Popular Favorite.

The London publisher, Walter Scott, recently asked the subscribers to his "Scott Library" to ballot on the question of what classic they would have for the 191st volume of that series. Goethe was victor in the composition, and a selection from his critical papers was accordingly chosen.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Joy.—Joy is a condition of the best development. It is an atmosphere in which the human soul flourishes, expands in a most wholesome and fruitful way.—Rev. Dr. Barrows, Presbyterian, Chicago, Ill.

Divinity.—Our glory is that we are made in the image of God, and the climax of our glory is that point in our development in which the divine image is most fully realized in us.—Rev. G. B. Vosburg, Baptist, Denver, Colo.

Capacity.—Verily, the immense meanness of which men are capable proves their capacity for goodness. Yonder field with rank weeds overtopping the fences demonstrates its fertility.—Rev. S. E. Young, Presbyterian, Newark, N. J.

A False Christianity.—Literary and dramatic Christianity will never be truly descriptive of the actual Christian life, because there is so much of it that is beyond the power of human portraiture.—Dr. D. A. Berle, Congregationalist, Boston, Mass.

Fruits.—The Christian gentleman will always be greater than his work, and yet will regard his work as the crystallization of his truest hopes and ambitions for the upbuilding of humanity.—Rev. Dr. Louis A. Banks, Universalist, Cleveland, Ohio.

Dress.—We live in an age of the world when appearances are taken as indications of prosperity. Coin can dress its possessor in purple and fine linen, but only character can put on the robe of righteousness.—Rev. Dr. Harcourt, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

The True Church.—The attractive church is that which in her worship, her preaching, her work and the lives of her people exalts the cross. Then the elements of Christ's power become the elements of her power.—Rev. B. E. Ely, Jr., Presbyterian, Rock Island, Ill.

Greatness.—True greatness means great sympathies as well as great power; because Jesus' greatness was complete he could live among fishermen as one who belonged to them in a masterful fellowship.—Rev. Dr. Charles Thompson, Presbyterian, New York City.

The Present.—The present is of more importance to you than the future. The present is the only reality; the past is a memory; the future a hope. Take care of the present, and the future will take care of itself.—Rev. U. S. Milburn, Universalist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Two Commandments.—There are two commandments underlying the ten; they relate to our duty to God and to our fellowmen, and are summed up in the New Testament commands: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, and thy neighbor as thyself."—Rev. P. S. Henson, Baptist, Chicago.

Sowing and Reaping.—Many a man sees daily the revelation of his sin in the ghastly reproduction of a son's career. Hell is on both sides of the tomb. Sow to sin and reap destruction. Sow to righteousness and reap righteousness.—Rev. W. F. Irwin, Presbyterian, Chicago, Ill.

Success.—Whatever worldly laurels you find on your brow they will wither. It is Christ that you want. Success in life God sometimes uses as a lash to the cross. Successful men are too often negligent of their souls.—Rev. Dr. John Robertson, Baptist, Philadelphia, Pa.

NEW ARC-LAMP REFLECTOR.

Increases the Ray's Strength and Protects the Carbon.

A new style arc lamp reflector for outdoor use, designed especially to obviate the disagreeable shadows thrown by an ordinary arc lamp, and which at the same time diffuses the rays so as to throw a soft light in every direction, consists of a series of glass rods built into an iron frame. They are adjustable, as shown in the illustration, which represents the reflector opened for the trimmer to recarbon the lamp. The rods are light in weight and practically indestructible, this being one of the points upon which the makers lay great stress. If a cylinder should be broken by accident another can be substituted at slight cost. The side shadows are obviated, as are also those caused by flying insects, the bars being so close together that it is impossible for the larger insects to get inside as they do in the ordinary glass globe.

The New Pies and the Old.

Way back in the sweet, sweet long ago,
When the world seemed just new made,
And the hours swept in gold batteau
O'er pleasure a bright cascade,
'Twas then in childhood's realm I met
Dear Maud of the dewy eyes,
And stood entranced as the deft brunette
Did fashion the wee dirt pies.

We're married now, and the self-same hands
That molded the pies of clay
Have sometimes structured other brands
Of pies in the modern way.
And, having sampled these pastry plants,
My oath I can solemnly take
That between the two I would risk my chance
With the kind that she used to make.
—Boston Courier.

"The March of the Men of Harlech."

In military music the march occupies a prominent position and has been employed not only to stimulate courage, but also from about the middle of the seventeenth century to insure the orderly advance of troops. One of the earliest instances of rhythmical march is the Welsh war strain, "The March of the Men of Harlech," which is supposed to have originated during the siege of Harlech castle in 1468. In England the military march was of somewhat later development.

Sir John Hawkins in his "History of Music" tells us that its characteristic was dignity and gravity, in which respect it differed greatly from the French, which was brisk and alert, and apropos of this subject the same author quotes a witty reply of an Elizabethan soldier to the French Marshal Biron's remark that "the English march, being beaten by the drum, was slow, heavy and sluggish." "That may be true," he said, "but slow as it is it has traversed your master's country from one end to the other."—Chambers' Journal.

Colored Mrs. Partington.

In spite of all that the public schools can do the colored person still gets terribly tangled up with the English language. A lady lately sent her colored servant to hang out the washing, and before long the girl returned and remarked, "Mrs. ——, the wind is playing hammock with those clothes!" Coming back one day from the office of a physician, where she had been treated for an ailment, the same girl said in answer to an inquiry as to how the doctor had prescribed for her, "Oh, he gave me some cider down to paint my side with!" (It turned out to be iodine.)—Boston Transcript.

To Be Kept Secret.

He was a great bore and was talking to a crowd about the coming local election. Said he: "Gibbs is a good man; he is capable, honest, fearless and conscientious. He will make the very kind of representative we need. He once saved my life from drowning."

"Do you really want to see Gibbs elected?" said a solemn faced old man.

"I do, indeed. I'd give anything to see him elected," answered the bore.

"Then never let anybody know he saved your life," counseled the solemn faced man.—London Tit-Bits.

GIRLS IN STORES,

offices, or factories, are peculiarly liable to female diseases, especially those who are constantly on their feet. Often they are unable to perform their duties, their suffering is so intense.

When the first symptoms present themselves, such as backache, pains in groins, headache, dizziness, faintness, swelled feet, blues, etc., they should at once write Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., stating symptoms. She will tell them exactly what to do.

GRACE B. STANSBURY, Pratt, Kansas, says:—"I suffered from intense pains in the womb and ovaries, and the backache was dreadful. I had leucorrhœa in its worst form. Thus I dragged along. At last I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice. Her answer came promptly. I read carefully her letter, and concluded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking two bottles I felt much better; but after using six bottles I was cured."

Kite flying is the latest fad.

R. S. Miner, Esq., left for Bodie last last Tuesday.

J. Darrah of Bishop spent several days in town this week.

The weather bureau is now in practical working order.

T. C. Boland and J. A. McKenzie were in town last Sunday.

John Baxter returned yesterday from a visit to Los Angeles.

Miss Susie Roughney is visiting her aunt Mrs. J. R. Moffatt.

County Superintendent Austin spent several days in town this week.

Gibson, a stockman from Ventura, arrived at Independence last evening.

The social dance given last Saturday evening at Mairs' hall was fairly well attended.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Dean were the recipients of a charivari last Friday evening at Camp Independence.

G. P. Bourland arrived at Independence yesterday from Los Angeles. He is bringing up a band of horses.

T. W. Kendall of Silver Star, Esmeralda county, Nevada, spent a few days in Independence this week. Mr. Kendall reports the Silver Star district as being in a flourishing condition, and is enthusiastic as to its future.

Green Crowley, who formerly owned a ranch at George's Creek, which he sold to John Shepherd in 1870, arrived at Independence last evening, and left by private conveyance for Bishop this morning. He is looking for range for a band of cattle.

Frank Dodge was badly injured at the marble quarry last Saturday by the premature explosion of a blast. One hole had been shot and he and his partner were preparing the second when it went off before the fuse was lit, Dodge receiving severe injuries about the head. Dr. Woodin was telegraphed for and has been attending him since.

Train Wreck.

The north bound train on the C. & C. was wrecked yesterday morning at a point about four miles north of Keeler. The wind was blowing a gale and the engineer could not see a drift of sand on the track in time to stop. The engine and two cars turned over, the engine being badly wrecked. Assistant Superintendent R. J. Laws was on board. A wrecking train was sent for to Hawthorne, which came down last evening. An extra engine pulled the train through to Hawthorne last night, and it is expected that today's train will be on time. The fireman was slightly bruised, nobody else hurt.

A Good Paying Enterprise

Some years ago W. K. Miller secured control of the Keeler & Mojave stage line. His means were limited, the line was very poorly equipped, and it was with great difficulty that he could operate it at all. By close application to business and the strictest economy he has built up a good paying business, and this line is now but an incident in his stage business. He is operating a line from Mojave to Ballarat twice a week, distance 120 miles; also a line from Randsburg to Mojave, daily, 50 miles, making in all 290 miles of stage line. He employs a small army of men as drivers, hostlers, station-keepers, etc., and as all the lines are equipped with 4-horse coaches he makes use of a large number of animals. Mr. Miller's office is at Mojave, and all the details of the work come under his personal supervision. The fact that he has built up a valuable business from which he is deriving a large income is due to persistent effort and careful management, and he is deserving of all the success he has achieved.

NEWSY NOTES FROM BIG PINE.

Big Pine, March 9, 1898.

Ed. Independent:—The electors of the Big Pine school district are confronted with the proposition of increased school room. In canvassing for support of the issuance of a three-thousand-dollar bond for more room, many urge that the Big Pine district has been much burdened on account of extra tax in the matter of school buildings—ament this feature of the question one of the county officers has furnished the following data from the county records. The various school districts in the county are bonded as follows:

Bishop, $7000.
Big Pine, $2500.
Fish Springs, $1500.
Laws, $1500.
Taboose, $1500.
Independence, $5000.
Union, $2500.
Lone Pine, $7,000.
Warm Springs, $1500.

As to the urgency and expediency of the bond issue the tax payers of the district are hereby informed that the trustees are paying $90 per term for extra room for the academical department, which would pay the yearly interest on the requisite bond for new buildings for some time to come. Further in the favor of immediate action to materially increase the house facilities of the district they are informed that the register of Prof. Dixon's department shows the names of ten new pupils since the last census, and that of Miss Chalfant's shows eleven new enrollments. So it would appear that upon the mentioned grounds of objection the proposed step should be taken.

Miss Oro Eldred was the recipient of a very flattering reception at Williams' hall on Monday evening. Miss Eldred has been at the bay for the past year, and is quite happy to bask in the light of friendly greetings.

The church folks will hold their bazaar on the 18th, and expect to be well patronized for the cause. "And we'uns" will will have the hugest hop ever hopped at the hamlet on the 17th. It will be a howler.

Correspondence Los Angeles Review:

The Gold Point mine in the Argus range is down 100 feet and is turning out some rich ore.

The Comet and Starr mines, two of the Santa Paula group, are reported showing up well. There is a considerable quantity of ore on the dump, which assays from $8.50 to $126 per ton.

The Uncle Joan and Desert King mines, owned by J. R. Hardy of San Francisco, are producing good ore, some of it going as high as $100.

In Pleasant canyon, near Ballarat, the Montgomery brothers are doing well. The World Beater, one of their mines, is establishing the correctness of its title. This mine is an immense quarry of ore on the mountain side down which it has to be pocked on burros and trained to their mill about a mile distant. The ore from the World Beater averages about $30 per ton. Twenty men are employed on the mine.

The Cooper mine, owned by Los Angeles parties, is making a record for itself in the richness of its ore. A milling of sixty sacks yielded an average of $10 a sack, or $600 in all.

The Tuber Canyon mine is another that is proving the wealth of this district. It is owned by San Francisco parties and they are pushing development work on it energetically. They have sixteen men employed on it.

It is estimated that over eighty tons of diamonds have been unearthed in the South African fields during the last eighteen years. These represent a total value of $280,000,000.

THE MAINE.

The past week has developed very little of interest regarding the Maine. The board of inquiry is still in session, and will not report for some days yet. The work of putting the country on a war footing is still being pushed forward at a rapid rate. The only sensational incident of the week was Spain's request that Consul-general Lee be recalled from Havana. The request was peremptorily refused.

Randsburg Notes

The Randsburg Railway company is now delivering water in carload lots of 6000 gallons at $20 per car laid down at the depot in Johannesburg.

During the past week an important discovery was made upon Rand mountain. It was nothing less than the discovery of the fact that two ledges, one fifteen feet in width and the other forty feet wide, that had heretofore been supposed to be barren country rock, were rich in gold. The ore is not free milling, but, according to assays made, carries an average of about $92 per ton in gold. These ledges are on the Yellow Aster group, and the discovery will add much to the importance of the camp.

Julius Roeper, Sr. Dead

Julius Roeper, Sr., passed away at the home of his son at Independence on Tuesday last at the ripe age of 79 years. The old gentleman was one of the hardy race of prospectors who came to the Pacific coast in the early 50's. He possessed and iron constitution, and in the early days of mining in Montana and California suffered untold hardships. To the last he persistently refused the comforts of home life and insisted on prospecting. He leaves one son, Julius C. Roeper of Independence, and one daughter, Mrs. J. White of Lone Pine. His aged widow survives him. Funeral services were held at the residence of J. C. Roeper at Independence on Wednesday afternoon and the remains were interred at Lone Pine yesterday morning, and was followed to the grave by a host of old-time friends.

The most notable new mining enterprise which has come to notice in the State during the week is one which the San Bernardino Times-Index enthusiastically describes as follows:

"San Bernardino county may soon be able to boast of her copper output as superior to that of the Arizona mines, and also boast of properties almost as rich as those of Michigan. The copper deposit in question is situated about midway between Daggett and Randsburg. It is a belt two miles broad by twenty eight miles long. In this belt the gentlemen have located 133 claims. The ore is unusually rich, running 17 per cent copper and about $11 gold and $13 silver to the ton. This is an average, while choice specimens have gone as high as 40 per cent copper. The Arizona mines only yield 10 per cent copper, and that is considered rich. In the belt there has been found plenty of water. The proposition is purely one of smelting. The properties are now in the hands of two rich private eastern corporations—the Pacific Copper Alliance of New York and the United Yucca Cooper Mining Company, and another will will soon be organized in Boston to co-operate. The properties are positively not for sale, and neither will stock be sold. They will sometime shortly commence the erection of a 100-ton smelter for the reduction of their ores."

The Loud postal bill is now under debate in Congress, and the average country editor is badly scared in consequence. The passage of the bill in its present form would work untold hardships to that already downtrodden portion of the populace.

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY AN ESTATE SHOULD NOT BE LEASED

In the Superior Court of the county of Inyo, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of William R. Tibbetts, deceased.

Upon reading and filing the petition of D. R. McLaren, praying that the administrator of the estate of William R. Tibbetts, deceased, be authorized, empowered and directed to lease the real estate belonging to said estate, which is described as follows, to wit: The S. W. ¼ of the S. W. ¼ and the S. E. ¼ of the S. W. ¼ of Sec. No. 18, and the N. E. ¼ of the N. W. ¼ of Sec. No. 19, Township No. 9 S., R. No. 34 E., M. D. M.

It is ordered that all persons interested in said estate appear before the above entitled court on the 12th day of March, A. D. 1898, at the hour of ten o'clock A. M., at the court room of said court, to show cause, if any they can, why the said real estate should not be leased for the annual rental of $100, as is more fully set forth in said petition, reference to which is hereby made for further particulars.

Dated February 23d, 1898.

RUTH.

She stood breast high among the corn,
Clasp'd by the golden light of morn,
Like the sweetheart of the sun,
Who many a glowing kiss had won.

On her cheek an autumn flush
Deeply ripen'd—such a blush
In the midst of brown was born,
Like red poppies grown with corn

Round her eyes her tresses fell,
Which were the blackest none could tell,
But long lashes veiled a light
That had else been all too bright.

And her hat, with shady brim,
Made her tressy forehead dim—
Thus she stood amid the stooks,
Praising God with sweetest looks.

Sure, I said, Heav'n did not mean
Where I reap thou shouldst but glean;
Lay thy sheaf adown and come
Share my harvest and my home!
—Thomas Moore.

THE RUBY HEART.

AUNT JESSICA had been round the world more than once. She had been what is vulgarly called a "globe trotter.' In her day she had collected many rare and curious and beautiful things; but now she was an old woman, and her time was come to die in the great silent house, filled with the furniture that had belonged to Aunt Jessica's forbears many score years ago, and enriched by the spoils of many lands, brought home by the energetic hands of Aunt Jessica herself.

There was one treasure above all that I coveted, and that I would have sold my soul to have had for my own—my cousin Edith.

As for the money—well, I am not more disinterested than most people; but I would rather have had Edith without a penny than all Aunt Jessica's money without Edith.

William and Bertram and I were sitting in the dining-room. Edith was above, helping poor aunt in the hard work of dying. Three raps came on the floor. We knew they were a signal that we were to go up, and that aunt had asked for us; and up we went.

"I have left everything divided among you four," she said; "and the ruby heart is to go to whichever of you three boys can find it." She spoke slowly and with difficulty.

I remembered the jolly old days when she used to come and see us at school and tip us, and I wished that death and time could have been more merciful. She went on.

"You know it has a charm to make you happy in your love. It would have made me happy, but he died, and it hadn't a chance to do its work; and now my time's come—it has been weary waiting."

And with that—the first and last hint we ever had of a romance in my aunt's life—she turned her wrinkled old face to the pillow with a sigh like a tired child's, and there were only four of us left in the room.

After the funeral and the reading of the will we three men set to work to find the charm.

"I shall take the library and aunt's bed-room first," said Bertram. As these were the rooms she had most used, I imagine he thought he had made the best choice. "You other fellows can arrange as you like!"

William chose the drawing room and the guest chamber, and they took the whole day searching systematically inch by inch for the ruby heart. I began to look in the dining-room, but Edith came in.

"Do you care so very much for the ruby heart?" said she.

"I confess I should like to find it," I answered.

"Shall I help you to look?"

She pulled out a book or two from the shelves in an aimless, desultory way, and then said:

"It's very sunshiny out of doors, don't you think?"

So we went on the river.

The next day I began to look for the heart again. Edith sent her duenna companion (who had once been her governess) to ask me if I did not think it would be nice to drive. Of course I said I thought it would, and off we went.

That evening she asked Bertram and William if they would like to come out next day to see some ruins.

"Thanks," said Bertram, "but I think my first duty to my poor aunt's memory is to find that heart."

"Besides," said William, who never had much sentiment, like Bertram, "it's worth thousands of pounds, I believe."

"To say nothing of the charm," I added.

"But you'll come, Wilfrid?" she said, looking at me with her soft gray eyes.

"Of course," I answered.

Bertram and William scowled at me. They would have given their ears, their lives, anything, in short, but their chances of a ruby heart worth thousands of pounds for the privilege that was to be mine to-morrow.

To be in love with cousin Edith was a mode, a fashion, among us. Besides, Edith was now an heiress.

"As soon as I have fulfilled dear aunt's last wishes," said Bertram—he talked, the silly fool, as if aunt had wished him to find the heart—"I shall be only too glad to accompany my cousin Edith on any excursion she may propose."

"So shall I," said William.

So Edith and I went to the ruins alone together.

"I hope it does not seem like disrespect to poor aunt's memory," she said, as we drove snugly back in the dog cart that evening, "our going out like this. But I couldn't bear to stay in the old house alone where she was so kind to me. It's better to go out, and I'm sure she would have wished it."

I felt that it was foolish of me not to make an effort to find the ruby heart. So next morning I got up very early and came down before the servants were about. I had pulled out half the drawers of the Chinese cabinet and looked into them, when my heart leaped into my mouth at the touch of a hand on my shoulder—Edith's!

"Still after that wretched ruby!" she said. "How you waste your time!"

"Why? Don't you think I shall find it?"

"I don't know," she said, looking at me with her eyes wide open, "but I don't think you will find it there, because Bertram has been through that three times already. Did you ever eat strawberries before breakfast and gather them yourself."

So we went into the kitchen garden and ate strawberries till the gong rang for breakfast. Bertram and William were getting quite sulky and savage from the non-success of their search, and the little time I had devoted to it annoyed them.

"I believe," said Bertram, with an air of gayety, a little overdone, "that Wilfrid thinks he knows where the heart is, and that he can put his hand on it at any moment."

"I wish I could," I said.

"So do I," said Edith, almost in the same breath.

"You wish Wilfrid to find the heart!" said William. "Why?"

"Oh, no. I don't mean Wilfrid: I meant—at least—Well, we shall all be glad when it's settled one way or the other, shan't we?"

I had never told Edith I loved her, because I didn't know how my aunt was to leave her money, and if Edith was to be heiress of the whole—but anyone will understand my reasons.

It was a week after aunt's funeral that I went into the rose garden, where Edith was snipping roses into a basket.

"I've been looking for the heart again," I said, "but I haven't found it."

"No," she answered, "and I don't suppose you will. Would a Gloire de Dijon be any compensation?"

She began to stick one in my coat as she spoke. Her slender waist, in its black gown, was very near my left arm, where she stood.

"I will take the bud," I said, "but not as compensation for the heart."

"Don't you think," she asked me, "that it might be possible to live happily without a charm to help you?"

"No," I said, "not without a charm to help you. But ruby hearts are not the only charms in the world."

My arm fell on her waist.

"Let them find their ruby heart! Let them chop it into pieces and divide it between them and sell the bits," said I.

"And you are content with what you have?" she asked.

"I am content with what I have," I answered, and my other arm went round her.

* * * * *

They never found that ruby heart, though the poor old house was tapped and tested from top to bottom. At last, wearied out, they took the portion of goods that fell unto them and went, fortunately for us, into a far country. And Edith and I were married.

We didn't go on a wedding tour, but came straight back to the dear old house.

On the evening of our wedding day we walked in the moonlight through the rose garden to listen to the nightingales. I stopped to hold her in my arms on the very spot where I had first kissed her, and the light shawl she wore round her head and shoulders fell back,

"What's that you have round your neck?" I said, for something darkened amid the white laces on her breast.

She did not answer. I put up my hand, touched with a thrill the whiteness of her neck, and found in my fingers the ruby heart!

"Then she gave it to you," I said; "it is yours?"

"She gave it into my keeping," answered Edith, dropping her chin till her lips rested on my hand; "but she left it to the man who should find it."

"And I have found it—here!"—The Argosy.

Once Wasted.

Modern man is gradually waking up to the fact that he can utilize everything. Coal is not only a source of heat and light, but a storehouse of colors, tastes, medicines, perfumes and explosives. From 140 pounds of gas tar in a ton of coal over 2,000 district shades of aniline dyes are made.

The same substance furnishes quinine, antipyrine, atrophine, morphine and a host of other drugs.

Of perfumes there can be obtained heliotropine, clove, queen of the meadows, cinnamon and bitter almonds, camphor and wintergreen.

It gives to us bellite and picrite, two powerful explosives, and supplies flavoring extracts which cannot be told from currant, raspberry, pepper and vanilla.

Scientists also get from the coal tar benzine and naphtha and the photographer gets from it his hydroquinone and likonogen.

It gives forth paraffin, pitch and creosote, material for artificial paving; saccharin, which is 300 times sweeter than sugar; lampblack, material for red inks, oils, varnish, rosin and a great supply of ammonia.

Mr. Holiday—"So you think that you would like to take the position of superintendent of the works? Don't you think it better for you to seek a more humble place at first?" Rollo—"Why, sir, you have told me that there is always plenty of room at the top. Surely, you would not have me crowd the worthy men who are lower down."—Boston Transcript.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

A Hard Hit.

Little 5-year-old Helen was lecturing her cousin, an Adelbert freshman, on the evils of foolishness, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Why," she said, "a big boy like you shouldn't be so foolish. I'd be ashamed to have so much foolishness about me."

"Why do you call him foolish?" inquired her uncle.

"Just 'cause he is," said Helen. "Why, if he keeps on he'll be most half as foolish as his father."

And the poor uncle hadn't a word to say.

Tommy's Mouse Trap.

The family had been greatly troubled with mice. Father and mother both tried in vain to get rid of them, and the cat could not catch them at all. Then Tommy took a hand. The ingenious youngster secured a piece of rubber hose about four feet long. In one end of the hose he put a piece of cheese, fitted snug and tight, while all around the outside he smeared some more cheese. The hungry mice soon scented the free lunch, and one by one went into the trap to investigate. After six had entered the tubular dining-room the watchful Tommy quickly placed a cork in the other hole, and thus captured the entire party. Every day after school the scheming youngster repeats this performance, and if the mice keep on being so accommodating they will soon be exterminated.

How Grandpa Found His Fairy.

It was a cold, rainy evening, and the Buckbee family were seated around a cheerful fire, popping corn and telling stories.

"Now, grandpa, you tell one," they cried. Grandpa appeared to be greatly surprised, but after seating Johnnie on his knee, he began as follows:

"When I was a small boy I lived in the State of Maine, many miles from here.

"Behind our house was a large orchard with a brook running through it.

"One afternoon I wandered down to this brook. I filled my pockets with apples and sat down to eat them.

"Somehow I fell asleep. However, I was soon awakened by a strange sound, and saw close beside me a—what do you think?" asked grandpa.

"A bear," cried Willie.

"A lion," said Fannie.

"No," said grandpa. "I saw a beautiful little fairy."

"She had a very soft voice and I listened attentively to what she said.

"'You are under my enchantment,' she whispered, 'and are bound to hunt for me until you find me. The place where I live is called California and is far from here.'

"Then I awoke and found it was only a dream; but the beautiful face and words still haunted me.

"I wrote the name that then seemed so strange to me on a large piece of paper and hung it in my room that I might not forget it.

"And so time passed on, still leaving me under the dream-fairy's enchantment.

"At last, when I was a young man, about 20 years old, there was great excitement about a piece of land 'way out West,' so ran the report, 'where gold was to be found in great abundance.'

"A great deal of this land was owned by Spaniards, and it was named California, after one of their legends.

"You can imagine how I felt. I rushed up to my room and took from my bureau drawer a crumpled piece of paper, yellow with age, on which was written in a boyish hand, 'California.'

"Yes, it was true, and now I could find my fairy.

"A month later I started for the Golden West, as it was called. You must remember that there was no railroad from Maine to California, and so it was not till after many months of hard traveling that I arrived there.

"To us weary travelers California was an ideal place—a land flowing with milk and honey.

"One day I was working in my mine. It was the same kind of a day as the one when I had my dream, and somehow I kept thinking of it. I had not yet found my fairy, and was sorely discouraged about it.

"Crash! What was that? A boulder had fallen. I sprang to my feet and looked around. There on the rocks lay the form of a young girl; and, oh, joy"—here grandpa became so excited he could hardly speak—"there was the face I had so long been hunting for; it was very pale and the beautiful golden hair hung all around it.

"I picked up my fair burden and hastily carried her to the nearest camp.

"I need not tell you any more, but if you want to see my fairy you had better look at grandma.

"And so, children, in this beautiful State I found both my fairy and my fortune."

She Had Different Ideas.

A little 5-year-old, whose name is Helen, and who lives in the east end, goes to a kindergarten, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. The teacher endeavors to give the pupils some useful object lesson every day, and recently she has been talking to them about health. She has told them that one of the best means of securing health and retaining it is plenty of outdoor exercise. She told them this very slowly, emphasizing each word as she proceeded.

"Understand, children," she said, "one of the best things to keep us well is plenty of outdoor exercise. Plenty of outdoor exercise."

"Now, Helen," she said, "what is one of the best things to keep us well?"

Helen has ideas of her own on a great many subjects.

"Plenty of warm milk before breakfast!" she shouted.

And the object lesson ended right there.

WHAT KEEPS THE SUN HOT.

It Will Probably Keep Warm for Twenty Million Years.

According to the most recent investigations, the temperature of the sun is somewhere between 5,000 and 6,000 degrees centigrade, and there are reasons for believing that for hundreds of thousands, perhaps for millions, of years, it has been radiating heat into space with no appreciable loss of temperature.

Were the sun simply a cooling mass of stone or metal it must ages ago have lost both its heat and its light; were it a globe of burning carbon it can easily be calculated that it would have burned out in about 6,000 years. Where, then, does it get its heat supply? is a question frequently asked.

We are so accustomed to regard fire, combustion, as the principal source of heat, or at any rate of intense heat, that it is not easy to realize that there may be other sources, equally abundant, from which the sun may obtain its perennial supply of this article. Astronomers long since discarded the idea that there is any sort of combustion going on in the sun.

Its heat is, more probably, of that sort known in physics as mechanical heat—heat that is produced by friction, by hammering or compression. We are familiar enough with the first two sources, though ordinarily the amount of heat which we perceive to be thus developed is not great, but heat produced by compression is not so often brought to our notice. From a variety of experiments, however, it can be shown that whenever a metal, as a piece of lead, or the air, or, indeed, any gas, is forcibly compressed heat is evolved, and this is the source to which astronomers are now inclined to look for the main supply of the solar energy.

This idea was first suggested by Helmholz, and it has been taken up and elaborated by Lord Kelvin. According to the theory of these scientists the sun, which is simply a mass of gaseous matter, is now and has been for ages contracting its dimensions—is growing smaller—and the mechanical heat produced in this process is precisely that which it is continually throwing off into space. Lord Kelvin calculated that a contraction of the sun, under the force of gravity, which diminished its diameter to the extent of four miles a century, would fully account for its heat supply, enormous as it is. The sun might contract at this rate for several thousand years before there would be any diminution of its size perceptible even through a telescope. Of course, this process has a limit to it and eventually the sun, having become too dense to contract further, must begin to cool off, but not for some 10,000,000 or 20,000,000 years, says Lord Kelvin.

The First Polar Explorer

The hardy mariners who were the pioneers in polar discovery achieved wonders, considering that they had everything to learn about methods of arctic work and their vessels and equipment were very inadequate. One of the greatest of all arctic voyagers, says Harper's Weekly, was the man who commanded the first true polar expedition, William Barntz. He sailed from Holland in 1594 on the little fishing smack Mercurious, and the object of his voyage shows how ignorant the merchants and seamen of those days were as to the navigability of arctic seas. Barentz pushed into the unknown for the purpose of sailing around the north end of Nova Zembla, and finding a northeast passage to China; and so for a month he skirted the wall of ice that barred his way, seeking in every direction for a lane by which he might travel through the pack, putting his vessel about eighty-one times, and traveling back and forth along the ice edge for seventeen hundred miles. The highest north he attained during this careful examination of the ice edge was 614 statute miles south of the highest point reached by Nansen or 874 miles from the pole.

Taste for Apples.

The superabundance of the apple crop last year has had one good result for the future of the orchardist. It rendered apples so cheap that the consumption was greater than ever before. A taste of this kind, once stimulated, generally continues; consequently the demand will be larger in seasons to come than it has been hitherto. This year apples have been in Philadelphia markets the whole year through. Last year's supply of late varieties, such as the Baldwin, had scarcely disappeared before the Russian variety, Tetofsky, came in from Virginia. These, of course, will be followed by better kinds.—Mehan's Monthly.

"Lucky" Pigs.

The favorite badge just now of the smart Englishwoman is a tiny "lucky" pig of bog oak, made in Ireland and worn upon her neck chain. To bring real luck these pigs must be Irish, but they can be bought in the London shops.

SASHES AND SKIRTS.

THESE ARTICLES NOW DEMAND CAREFUL ATTENTION.

The Girlish Is Again in Great Vogue and It Is Used with Many Modifications—Some Pretty Substitutes—Three Skirts Described and Pictured.

Girlishness Succeeds Dash.

New York correspondence:

PRUNES and prisms are again the secret practice of rosy lips, that their expression may match the gown worn, and the feature of the evening or dancing dress that is most characteristically ingenuous is its sash. All sorts of lovely materials come now by the yard, made in series of little ruffles. The sort of thing that would mean hours of dressmaker work, even with a machine, is now in place with a rush, a bang, and a row or two of stitching. The following materials are but a few of the newest in the available list:

Black net ruffled with little frills of black net spangled with gold is just a half-yard wide, the little frills running across the width, and makes an adorable sash with the loops made of plain black net. Such a sash has to be made up, of course, and the fancy just now is for the regular tie sash. White net is covered with ruffles of white chiffon, pleated closely, and then the edge of each ruffle is finished with narrow lace, set on after the pleating of the frill. Liberty silk is frilled with chiffon, edged with baby ribbon set on every frill. There is a look of elaboration about all these sorts, and the height of ingenuousness is reached by a plainer kind—one like that pictured beside the initial, for instance. This was light pink silk, the dress itself being white silk.

THREE SATISFACTORY SUBSTITUTES FOR THE SASH.

In all of the befrilled sashes the frill is pleated closely, and the edging is set on after the frilling. Whole skirts are made of such frilled material, and it takes an artist to match the frills. The material is so wide that the width makes the length of the skirt, the frills running lengthwise, is used, but the effect is not so swagger as that produced by fitting narrow widths into a much gored skirt, the frills all matching. Sashes of the dress goods, too, elaborated with chiffon or ribbon, or with both, are sometimes quite as highly wrought as are the pleated and frilled sorts. In the second picture, which presents a dancing dress of turquoise blue corded silk, the handsome sash was was of the silk covered with white figured chiffon, and banded at end and sides with black velvet ribbon to harmonize with the gown's trimming.

SASHED GIRLISHLY.

This skirt was trimmed at the knees with two deep, box-pleated flounces of white chiffon and black ribbon heading. Three smaller ruffles garnished the hips. The bodice had a square cut-out, and below the bust were two deep ruffles. Bands of the ribbon were placed across the bust and started from shoulders to the waist line, ending below the knees on the skirt. The gathered sleeves were turquoise blue figured chiffon, and the belt consisted of two bands of the ribbon ending at the back with the sash already described.

While there is general use of sashes tying in back and reaching nearly to the hem of the skirt, there are other ways a-plenty to finish the waist of a dancing dress acceptably. Three very tasteful dresses are put in one picture here, and it will be seen that no one of them has a sash. Little ribbon ties are also in vogue; some of them pass once about the waist, tying at the side, the loops set up and down, at once studied and careless; again ribbon is draped elaborately about the waist, binding the waist closely in the first tie, and then looping loosely about the hips, with bows swinging well down toward the hem of the skirt. Some gowns are cut with the old-time overdress idea in view, and the back of the overdress is lifted short and divided into a pair of ends that tie with sash effect at the back. These are the three types pictured.

Don't be persuaded that all skirts are trimmed; they are not. Street skirts are mostly plain, though they may be embellished with braiding, and party and house gowns have skirts plain or not, exactly as each wearer likes. Accordion-pleated materials are used for skirting, the lines of the pleats falling unbroken by drapery or trimming, and materials showing figure or stripe present no other ornamentation. Here are a plain skirt of blue and white striped silk and another of accordion-pleated light blue taffeta ornamented only by its blue ribbon belt finish. A sash, bow or looping of ribbon about the waist may break the severity of a skirt without counting as skirt trimming.

When the overskirt idea is carried out it often appears over a perfectly plain skirt, and may be cut in curved apron effect, in deep points or even slashed into several long points. Lace is set about the edge, or often the entire overdress is a series of frills, lace, chiffon or ribbon being used. Sometimes the overskirt is merely one in effect, and is really an elaborate trimming of the skirt, but where the overdress is really a separate garment, then often the skirt over which it is worn is intended for wear without it, and when so worn is, though unornamented, quite as much the vogue as before. The one pictured here was of the former type, and a most elaborate trimming it made, its rich white lace being edged with white feather trimming, lace and feathers being employed elsewhere as indicated. The dress fabric was green satin.

The woman with slender figure and slightly sloping hips may be out of fashion in these days, but she can wear a princess gown and make the rest of us envious. The princess gown should only be attempted by the right figure, and when the right goods is at your disposal. It demands rich material, heavy lustrous silk, glossy satin, goods richly figured. Rich orange satin was the fabric of the one sketched here. The sweep from bust to hem of skirt demands an exquisite surface. Often some slight relief here emphasizes the grace of the cut and obscures its trying quality. A soft sash knot at the bust, the ends hanging nearly to the hem of the skirt, is a good device, or rich lace may be made to hang from the left side almost at the cut-out to well below the knee, as in this picture. Use nothing but fine material. An evening gown of another type may be faked, but the princess must bear inspection. So must she who wears it.

"You will be sorry for the way you have neglected me when I am silent in the tomb," said Mrs. Peck; "think of that." "My dear," said Mr. Peck, as innocently as he could, "I can not imagine such a thing."—Indianapolis Journal.

"Did you tell that young man not to call here any more?" asked Mabel's father, severely. "N—no." "Why not?" "I didn't think that it was necessary. I don't see how he could call any more now. He calls seven times a week."—Washington Star.

"I am told," remarked Miss Cayenne, "that you said some very clever things last evening." "Yes," replied Willie Wishington; "it is very discouraging." "What is?" "The surprised manner in which everybody is talking about it."—Washington Star.

"How can I get an article in your paper?" asked a correspondent of a Western journal. "It all depends on the article you want to get into our paper," replied the editor; "if the article is small in bulk, like a hair brush or a tea-caddy, spread the paper out upon the floor, and placing the article in the center, wrap it up by carefully folding the edges over it, and tie with a string. This will keep the article from slipping out of the paper. If, on the other hand, the article is an English bath-tub or a clothes-horse, you would better not try it at all."—Bazar

ARE YOU TO LIVE IN ALASKA?

Some Requirements That Are Indispensable.

The universal article of diet in that country, depended upon and indispensable, is bread or biscuit. And to make the bread and biscuit, either in the camp or upon the trail, yeast cannot be used—it must be baking powder; and the powder manufactured by the processes of the Royal Baking Powder Company, miners and prospectors have learned, is the only one which will stand in that peculiar climate of cold and dampness and raise the bread and biscuit satisfactorily.

These facts are very important for every one proposing to go to Alaska and the Yukon country to know, for should he be persuaded by some outfitter to take one of the cheap brands of baking powder it will cost just as much to transport it, and then when he opens it for use, after all his labor in packing it over the long and difficult route, he will find a solid caked mass or a lot of spoiled powder, with no strength and useless. Such a mistake might lead to the most serious results. Alaska is no place in which to experiment in food, or try to economize with your stomach. For use in such a climate, and under the trying and fatiguing conditions of life and labor in that country, everything must be the best and most useful, and above all it is imperative that all food supplies shall have perfect keeping qualities. It is absurd to convey over such difficult and expensive routes an article that will deteriorate in transit, or that will be found when required for use to have lost a great part of its value.

There is no better guide to follow in these matters than the advice of those who have gone through similar experience. Mr. McQuesten, who is called "the father of Alaska," after an experience of years upon the trail, in the camp, and in the use of every kind of supply, says: "We find in Alaska that the importance of a proper kind of baking powder cannot be overestimated. A miner with a can of bad baking powder is almost helpless in Alaska. We have tried all sorts, and have been obliged to settle down to use nothing but the Royal. It is stronger and carries further, but above all things, it is the only powder that will endure the severe climatic changes of the arctic region."

It is for the same reasons that the U. S. Government in its relief expeditions, and Peary, the famous arctic traveler, have carried the Royal Baking Powder exclusively.

The Royal Baking Powder will not cake nor lose its strength either on board ship or in damp climates, and in the most highly concentrated and efficient of leavening agents. Hence it is indispensable to every Alaskan outfit. It can be had of the trading companies in Alaska, but should the miner procure his supplies before leaving, he should resist every attempt of the outfitter to palm off upon him any of the other brands of baking powder, for they will spoil and prove the cause of great disappointment and trouble.

Animals' Fright Is Short.

A question that has often been asked is, How long does fright last in a wild creature? The close observer will be surprised at its brief duration. They are not subject to "nerves" like human beings. A partridge after running (or rather flying) the gantlet of half a dozen guns—if we may be allowed a mixed metaphor—drops on the other side of a hedge and begins calmly to peck as if nothing had happened. You would think a rabbit after hearing a charge of shot whistling about its haunches and just managing to escape from a yelping spaniel would keep indoors for a week, but out it pops quite merrily as soon as the coast is clear. A fox pursued by hounds has been known to halt and kill a fowl in its flight, though we may assume that his enemies were not close to Reynard at the time. We have been led into thinking about the matter by noting what took place at a cover after being shot over.—Pall Mall Gazette.

AN OPEN LETTER

From Miss May Sachner, of Columbus, O., to Ailing Women.

To all women who are ill:

It affords me great pleasure to tell you of the benefit I have derived from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude for the boon given to suffering women in that excellent remedy.

Before taking the Compound I was thin, sallow, and nervous. I was troubled with leucorrhœa, and my menstrual periods were very irregular. I tried three physicians and gradually grew worse. About a year ago I was advised by a friend to try Mrs. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and Vegetable Compound, which I did. After using three bottles of the Vegetable Compound and one package of Sanative Wash, I am now enjoying better health than I ever did, and attribute the same to Mrs. Pinkham's wonderful remedies. I cannot find words to express what a Godsend they have been to me.

IT ALL WILL COME OUT RIGHT.

Whatever is a cruel wrong,
Whatever is unjust,
The honest years that speed along
Will trample in the dust.
In restless youth I railed at fate
With all my puny might,
But now I know if I but wait
It all will come out right.

Though vice may don the judge's crown
And play the censor's part,
And fact be cowed by falsehood's frown,
And nature ruled by art,
Though labor toils through blinding tears,
And idle wealth is night,
I know the honest, earnest years
Will bring it all out right.

Though poor and loveless creeds may pass
For pure religion's gold,
Though ignorance may rule the mass,
While truth meets glances cold,
I know a law supreme, sublime,
Controls us with its might,
And in God's own appointed time
It all will come out right.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

BEFORE THE RAILROADS.

When Philadelphia Was the Greatest City In the American Colonies.

In 1774 Philadelphia was the largest town in the American colonies. Estimates of the population, which are all we have, differ widely, but it was probably not far from 30,000. A single city now has a larger population than all the colonies possessed in 1774, and there are in the United States today 104 cities and towns of over 30,000 inhabitants. Figures alone, however, cannot express the difference between those days and our own. Now a town of 30,000 people is reached by railroads and telegraphs. It is in close touch with all the rest of the world. Business brings strangers to it constantly, who come like shadows and so depart, unnoticed, except by those with whom they are immediately concerned. It was not so in 1774, not even in Philadelphia, which was as nearly as possible the central point of the colonies as well as the most populous city.

Thanks to the energy and genius of Franklin, Philadelphia was paved, lighted and ordered in a way almost unknown in any other town of that period. It was well built and thriving. Business was active, and the people were thrifty and prosperous and lived well. Yet, despite all these good qualities, we must make an effort of the imagination to realize how quietly and slowly life moved then in comparison to the pace of today.

There in Philadelphia was the center of the postal system of the continent, and the recently established mail coach called the "Flying Machine," not in jest but in praise, performed the journey to New York in the hitherto unequaled time of two days. Another mail at longer intervals crept more slowly to the south. Vessels of the coastwise traffic or from beyond seas came into port at uncertain times and after long and still more uncertain voyages. The daily round of life was so regular and so quiet that any incident or any novelty drew interest and attention in a way which would now be impossible.—Senator Henry Cabot Lodge in Scribner's.

TEAS AND TEAS.

Things Once Used or Now Used as Substitutes For the Chinese Herb.

Of course every one knows that we drink a good deal that isn't tea when we drink a cup of tea. We drink—or are supposed to drink—some tea, some lead and some straw. But there are several "teas" that the drinkers know are not made of tea leaves and yet are not adulterated.

In Peru they drink mate, a tea made from the Ilex paraguensis, a species of holly. This is the only mate tea, but there is a Brazilian tea, gorgonha, called mate there; another tea used in Austria, called Brazilian tea, and several other so called mate teas are made from different varieties of the ilex. In Labrador they make a tea from two species of ledum. Oswego tea was made from the scarlet monarda, and mountain tea from the dwarf evergreen, Gaultheria procumbens. Then clover tea and tansy tea and catmip tea and mint tea are used, though not as beverages.

In Sumatra they use coffee leaves to make tea out of, and the beverage is said to be very refreshing. In Mauritius the leaves of an orchid, Angreecum fragrans, are used. The Tonquinese have teas of their own, made of leaves, berries, barks and woods. The Abyssinians make tea out of the leaves of the Catha edulis. When a sentinel can't leave his post to get a cup of tea, he can chew a leaf or two of this plant, and he won't feel like going to sleep all night. In Tasmania there are said to be more than 200 substitutes for tea; in England they used to make a tea of sage, betony or rosemary and of raspberry leaves; in France they use black currant leaves and borage to make tea, and a century or so ago they gathered in English gardens and fields ash, elder and sloe leaves, and the leaves of whitethorn and blackthorn, out of which to make tea. So it is evident that there are teas and teas.—New York Sun.

Drying Clothes.

The drying of clothes in frosty weather is sometimes, in the case of delicate fabrics, attended with tearing because of the quick stiffening in the very cold air. A simple precaution which will prevent any such trouble is to dissolve three or four handfuls of coarse salt in the last rinsing water, thus making it, in fact, a weak brine. Articles so rinsed will not suffer from or stiffen with the cold.

His Board of Trade Style.

Clara (excitedly)—Well, papa, did the count ask you for me today?

Mr. Millyuns—Ask me for you? Naw! He told me if I wanted to put up margins enough he'd talk business.—Chicago News.

SOME QUEER GREETINGS.

Methods of Salutations in Vogue in Various Countries.

"How do you do?" we say as we meet a friend whom we have not seen for some time, and the question is almost invariably accompanied by a shake of the hand which is cordial or cold, long or short, hearty or indifferent, according as the hearts back of the hands are more or less attached one to the other. This is our common greeting, but our brethren of other lands have some oddities of salutation, though no doubt the feelings back of the form are very similar the world around.

The French and German people have one custom in common, though they are not on the best of terms in some respects. Gentlemen who are good friends kiss each other on the cheek when meeting, and it is only courtesy for gentlemen to kiss the hands of their lady friends by way of greeting. Russia has the same custom, and to unfamiliar eyes the spectacle of two beared "mujiks" embracing each other tenderly upon the street is rather mirth-provoking, to say the least. Also the Arabs of the desert, stately and imposing figures in their flowing robes and many folded draperies, their belts full of daggers and pistols and other war-like gear, these stalwart men hug and kiss each other with all the effusiveness ascribed to the average school girl, at the same time making a host of inquiries about each other's health, past and present and prospects for the future.

A Chinaman who happens to be riding dismounts and leads his horse past one whom he considers his social superior or equal. His neighbor of the land of cherry blossoms, the Mikado's empire, kicks off his straw or wooden sandals, crosses his hands upon his breast, in an attitude of supplication, and cries, "Spare me!" as though his brad-hatted vis-a-vis, who perhaps is his next-door neighbor and a very good friend, was the great and powerful Mikado himself, who had only to say the word and his head would roll in the dust. The implied meaning of this salutation is an outgrowth of the exaggerated politeness for which Japan is famous.

The natives of Arabia Petrea bravely put cheek to cheek and pass on about their business without speaking. The Burmese, with delicate flattery, pretend to smell of each other's faces, pronounce them sweet and ask for a smell. The turbaned Turk crosses his hands upon his breast and makes a profound obeisance, or "salaam," thus showing his deep regard without coming in contact personally with its object, and the savages of the Australian bush practice the singular custom of sticking out their tongues at each other in a frank fashion that would delight the heart of a physician, no doubt.

To prostrate one's self before another and lie with face to the dust is the salutation of an inferior in Dahomey in Africa to a superior. This abject crawling upon the ground, no doubt, first began in fear, and is now held as a ceremony of recognition.

While Western nations insist on the uncovering of the head in token of respect, in India it has always been the feet that must be uncovered before the royal presence.

Queer Lake Salawik.

The rich placers of Klondike are not the only curiosity of the country traversed by the Yukon. Not far from Dawson there is in Alaska a really extraordinary lake, which was named Salawik by its discoverer, the Rev. P. Tosi, a missionary among the savages, says the Lewiston (Me.) Republic.

This lake, which is ninety miles long and about fifteen miles wide, is perhaps the only one in all that extreme northern region which does not freeze over during the winter. No communication has been discovered between it and the sea; nevertheless, at high water upon the coasts of the northern ocean, the level of the lake rises and it falls again at low tide.

This sympathy with the sea does not extend to the point of making Salawik a salt lake; on the contrary, its waters are good to drink. But another of its peculiarities is that the temperature rises in winter and falls in summer. When all the water courses of the neighboring country are completely frozen over Lake Salawik becomes so warm that it is really pleasant to bathe in it. On the other hand, in the summer time the water is extremely cold.

This peculiarity makes it in the winter time a Mecca of fishermen. The abundance of fish in the lake is so great that a person can almost catch them with the hand and can kill large quantities with a club. Here for the miners is a source of food supply which certainly will contribute to diminish the cost of living in that inhospitable region. In an hour a man can get enough fish to supply himself for a month, and of the very best quality, including salmon, ranging from twenty to fifty pounds in weight.

It will not be astonishing if some fine day we may see upon the shores of Lake Slawik one of those fashionable hotels which are the glory of American watering places.

Meats in France and Germany.

A Cologne newspaper notes some remarkable difference in the French and German preference for certain kinds of meats. Berlin consumes 700,000 hogs annually, Paris only 300,000. Parisians eat 100,000 head of cattle more than Berliners; while calves are much less liked in France than Germany, Berliners eating 250,000, Parisians only 50,000 a year. Mutton is much more appreciated in Paris, where 1,800,000 sheep (more than France raises) are eaten, whereas Berlin calls for only one-quarter that number. On the other hand, Parisians eat 20,000 horses, Berliners only 4,000.

A Peculiar Ambition.

Monongalia County, West Virginia, has a citizen named Haymond Gripp with an ambition so peculiar and unusual that some people think him crazy. For many years he has made it a point to be the first citizen in the county to pay his taxes. About three years ago, and for the first time in his life, he was beaten by a swifter taxpayer, and it almost broke his heart.

AT LAST!

A Cure for Consumption, Catarrh and Lung Troubles that Cures.

Remarkable Discovery of an American Medico-Chemist.

ITS GREAT VALUE TO HUMANITY.

How Every Reader of This Paper May Obtain the New and Free Scientific System of Medicine.

CORRESPONDENCE—ADVICE ABSOLUTELY FREE AND PROFESSIONALLY CONFIDENTIAL.

Workers in the wide, unexplored field of modern chemistry are daily astounding the world with new wonders. Professor and layman vie with each other in their commendable efforts to lessen the ills of humanity. Yesterday it was Pasteur and Koch, and today it is Slocum, with a new discovery which is the result of years of careful study and research.

Foremost among the world's greatest chemists stands T. A. Slocum, of New York City. His researches and experiments, patiently carried on for years, have finally culminated in results which are proving as beneficial to humanity as the discoveries of any chemist, ancient or modern. His efforts which for years had been directed toward the discovery of a positive cure for consumption were finally successful, and already his "new scientific system of medicine" has, by its timely use, permanently cured thousands of apparently hopeless cases, and it seems a necessary and humane duty to bring such facts to the attention of all invalids.

The medical profession throughout America and Europe are almost unanimous in the opinion that nearly all physical ailments naturally tend to the generation of consumption. The afflicted die in the short, cold days of winter much faster than the long, hot days of summer.

The Doctor has proved the dreaded disease to be curable beyond a doubt, in any climate, and has on file in his American and European laboratories thousands of letters of heartfelt gratitude from those benefitted or cured in all parts of the world.

No one having, or threatened with, any disease, should hesitate a day, but should write at once. Facts prove that the Doctor has discovered a reliable and absolute cure for Consumption (Tuberculosis) and all bronchial, throat, lung and chest troubles, stubborn coughs, catarrhal affections, scrofula, general decline and weakness, loss of flesh, and all wasting conditions, and to demonstrate its wonderful merits, he will send Three Free Bottles (all a patient) of his New Discoveries, with full instructions, to any reader of this paper.

Simply write to T. A. Slocum, M. C., 98 Pine street, New York, giving full address.

There is no charge for correspondence advice—strictly professional and confidential.

Knowing, as we do, of the undoubted efficacy of The Slocum System of Medicine, we urge every sufferer to take advantage of this most liberal proposition.

A system of medical treatment that will cure catarrh, lung troubles and consumption is certainly good for—and will cure—any wasting disease that humanity is heir to.

Please tell the Doctor, when writing, that you read his generous offer in our paper.

THEY DON'T LIKE PAPER.

Savages at First Contact Regard the Fabric With Suspicion.

When savage people first come in contact with the whites, none of the wonders that they see is regarded with more suspicion than large sheets of paper. The native is apt to regard paper as a sort of cloth, and the fact that it tears easily and is worthless for most of the purposes to which cloth is put convinces him that it is a fraud.

One or two Kongo travelers told of the disgust with which the natives at first regarded paper. The Kongo tribes, by the way, are on the lookout for sharpers, and it is exceedingly hard work for anybody to sell them a bad quality of cutlery or cloth. Savages soon find, however, that paper is not intended to serve the purposes of cloth. Then they cease to look upon it as a fraud, but they do not think it ranks high among white man's manufactures, and they have little use for it.

Some time ago a well known explorer was traveling in the interior of Queensland, Australia, where he met many natives who had never seen a white man before.

One day a crowd of natives was in the white man's camp carefully inspecting the explorer and his baggage when a newspaper happened to drop out of his pocket.

The natives unfolded and spread it out on the ground. They decided that it must be an article of wearing apparel, and one of them tried it on. He wrapped it round his shoulders like a shawl and sat down on the ground, arranging his covering this way and that and watching the faces of the crowd to see what they thought of his elegant garment, covered as it was with many thousands of curious marks.

Presently, however, an accident happened. While the savage was rearranging his shawl and trying to bring the corners together in front of him the garment began to tear at the nape of his neck. A howl from the crowd called attention to the disaster. The blanket, or whatever it was, was evidently made of the poorest sort of material.

The savage took his covering off, examined the mischief he had wrought, made the tear a little longer and then with his finger poked a hole through the paper.

That settled the fact that the article was worthless. The newspaper suddenly lost all interest for the natives, who turned their attention to less destructible objects.—Pearson's Weekly.

An Omitted Particular.

"These here city folks may be purty smart in some ways," said Uncle Reuben, "but they're away behind us Pokeberry county people in one respect."

"What's that?" asked his nephew.

"Why, these here guideposts you have on your crossroads tell which directions the streets is in all right, but I notice it never says how far it is to 'em."—Chicago Post.

The Original Organ Grinder.

When barrel organs, once the usual accompaniment of the magic lantern, came into use, a native of the province of Tende was one of the first who traveled about Europe with this instrument.

In his peregrinations he collected money enough to enable him to purchase from the king of Sardinia the title of count of the country where he was born—for which, probably, in a time of war he did not pay above 1,000 guineas.

With the remainder of his money he purchased an estate suitable to his rank and settled himself peaceably for the remainder of his days in his mansion.

In the entrance hall of his dwelling he hung up his magic lantern and his organ facing the door, there to be carefully preserved till they moldered to dust, and he ordered by his will that any one of his descendants who should cause them to be removed should forfeit his inheritance and his patrimony revert to the next heir, or, in failure of a successor, to the hospital of Tende.

Only a few years ago the organ and lantern were still to be seen carefully preserved.—Pearson's Weekly.

Balmoral is a greatly larger estate now than it was when first it became a royal residence. To the original 10,000 or 11,000 acres were soon added the 6,000 acres of the adjoining Birkhall estate. Then in 1878 the forest of Ballochoule was purchased—another 10,000 acres—and there have since been more recent acquisitions.

A NEW CRAZY SECT IN CONNECTICUT.

A lot of fanatics in the State recently immersed an old rheumatic woman bodily in the water to "heal her" as they said. She nearly died in consequence. How much better it would have been to have treated the poor old woman for her infirmity with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which not only cures rheumatism, but prevents kidney complaint and remedies dyspepsia, constipation, liver trouble and nervous prostration. Give it a systematic trial.

TYPE FOUNDING ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Since type founding was first introduced on this Coast, there have been many improvements in all the machinery and methods of manufacturing type, all of which has been with a view of attaining the highest perfection. The old methods have been discarded and the most perfect type is completely finished by machinery, and the hand-finished type can no more be compared with the latest results of machine-finished, than the old hand-made Swiss watches to the latest Waltham movements. No amount of patching up, repairing or renovating can ever make a '49 machine, mold or matrix satisfactory to a progressive printer. The only type foundry on the Pacific Coast who manufacture and finish type on perfecting machines is the American Type Founders' Company of San Francisco and Los Angeles. They conduct the largest and most complete printers' supply house, giving steady employment to upwards of one hundred hands. Over ninety per cent of all the Coast papers are printed upon their celebrated copper alloy type; it outwears any other make. Publishers can make no mistake in buying from this leading and progressive firm.

Looking Well.

Superintendent Hoskins came in from the Reward mine yesterday and brought in a bar of bullion valued at $1,800, the result of a 13-day run on half time. The mine is now looking better and yielding better than at any time in its history. There is a larger and richer ore body, and the ore is more free milling than near the surface. Mr. Hoskins also brought in three small bars, the result of test runs on surrounding mines.

PARIS RESTAURANTS.

INFORMATION FOR THOSE WHO INTEND VISITING THE GAY CITY.

The "Swell" Eating Places and Samples of Their Charges—Prices That Sometimes Astonish Even High Rolling Americans.

Those Americans who think that New York is an expensive place ought to go to Paris. There is no doubt that the prices of New York at first class places are high, but the New York restaurants have not reached such expertness in making out bills as they have in Paris. Therefore it is not at all uncommon to notice an American with his wife going over his bill with the hair slowly rising upon his head.

There are plenty of places in Paris where you can get a dinner cheaper—the bouillons Duval, for example. These restaurants are sprinkled all over Paris, and they give you plain food very well cooked at a reasonable figure. But the average American generally goes to the swell places, which are about 12 in number. There is the Cafe de Paris, Cubat's, Chevillard's, Durand's, Joseph's, the Restaurant Larue, the Tour d'Argent, Maire's, Paillard's, the Maison Doree, the Cafe Voisin and the Restaurant Lucas, together with the Cafe Anglais, the Lion d'Or, Foyot's and Marquery's, if you choose to include them. The Cafe Anglais is no longer first class, the Lion d'Or has been closed, Foyot's is in the Latin quarter and Marquery's is only middle class. The highest priced places are Durand's, Paillard's and the Cafe Voisin, and these are the most frequented. Each year the restaurant frequented by the "swells" changes. Two years ago it was Durand's, last year it was Paillard's and this year it is Voisin's.

Americans are generally disappointed in the appearance of these places because they are frequently small and by no means gorgeous in their equipments. They are all arranged in about the same way—a row of cushioned seats or divans running around the wall, with tables placed next to them. The guests nearly always ensconce themselves on the seats next to the wall and are served from the other side of the tables by the waiters. Occasionally, when the place is crowded, people will seat themselves on the outside, but ordinarily they are found on only one side of the table. As for the table linen, the china, the knives and forks, they are by no means as fine as we find in many of the American hotels and restaurants. The cooking, however, is hard to excel. The reason that the Paris restaurants obtain such high prices is owing to their peculiarity of getting what they call primeurs. Their Paris epicurean guests seem to want to eat things out of season. For example, they are fond of serving you peas in January. Then, they will give you pheasants and birdnest soup and other exotic dishes.

Here is a sample dinner and a very plain one for two at a Paris restaurant. They charge you, by the way, 50 centimes, or 10 cents, to sit down. Therefore for the two places, or couverts, put down 1 franc; an aperitif, the substitute for our American cocktail, another franc; a bottle of ordinary white wine, 3 francs; a bottle of ordinary burgundy, 7 francs; a tureen of bouillon, another franc; a sole with normandy sauce, 8 francs; a duckling with turnips and cream, 15 francs; asparagus with a delicate sauce, 12 francs; ice cream tart, 5 francs; coffee, half a france; liqueurs, 1 franc; tip, half a franc; total, about 60 francs, or about $12.

The French have many ways of cooking eggs most deliciously. For example, eggs with shrimps, scrambled eggs with chicken gravy, and scrambled eggs with almost everything, much better, you find, than in America. They also cook many things in covered saucepans which are most appetizing. Their saucepans are earthenware, of the kind called cassero[illegible], and by keeping them covered they can cook a chicken en casserole which will make your mouth water. The average American chicken is baked in an oven—although the cook thinks she is roasting it when she is only baking it—and, as a rule, it is dry and tasteless and unfit to eat.

You can get a lunch, or what the French call a breakfast, at any of these restaurants, including a bottle of ordinary wine, butter, shrimps, eggs and mushrooms, chicken with artichoke hearts, strawberry tart, coffee and cheese for about 25 francs, say $5. But all of these bills that I am giving you are the dinners and breakfasts ordered by people who are careful. The average American is apt to take things which are suggested to him by the waiter, and when he has eaten with his table companion say four dishes and finds that it costs $10 apiece it makes him very cool. If, you will notice, I have put on the bills of fare above only ordinary wines. If you place yourself in the hands of the sommelier, or wine steward, and tell him you want something very good he will bring you up an old cobwebby bottle of burgundy without any fuss, put it and will tell you that it is good. So it is. It will generally cost you more than champagne, and by the way it is better than champagne. Later you soon find out that there are other good burgundy and bordeaux, but you have to pay for them. I would advise these Americans always to trust to the sommelier rather than attempt to find things themselves from the wine list, because the wine list is meaningless. All it can tell you is vintage and prices, and sometimes not even that.—Paris Cor. San Francisco Argonaut.

Enlightened.

Tarry de Windt, the Siberian traveler, took a number of woodcuts of the Andree polar balloon for distribution among the natives of northwestern Siberia. One day he noticed a Tchuktchi studying one of the pictures intently and asked him what he would do if he saw it in the sky. "Shoot it," was the immediate reply.

[illegible] Woman.

Mrs. Dougal McLean, the regent of the New York City chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, is described as a brilliant woman, of [illegible] executive ability, and under her regime the Daughters of the American Revolution are constantly winning new honors. It is said that she suggested the letter to Senator George F. Edmunds on the Venezuelan arbitration question which called forth his answer, thus placing the Daughters of the American Revolution on record as the first organization of women to secure official recognition in a matter of international arbitration. To her are due the origin and development of the idea of founding a chair of colonial and Revolutionary history at Barnard college. She comes of a long line of Revolutionary stock and is the daughter of the late Judge John Ritchie, who also served in our national congress. She was born in Frederick, Md., in a house directly opposite Barbara Frietchie's home.—Woman's Journal.

California Forests.

Prof. Geo. W. Dunn furnishes the following interesting article on the forests of the state:

The forests of California far excel those of any other country in the wealth of timber and magnificence of individual species. The two species of redwood, the redwood proper and the great tree of California both belong to the same genus, and neither of them are to be found in any other country. The Sequoia is the giant of the whole vegetable kingdom, its size can scarcely be realized as you approach this tree. What a feeling of awe comes over one! Its immense size, the beautiful contrast between the bright green foliage and the cinnamon colored bark give it a beautiful appearance. Just think of looking at a tree some forty feet in diameter, and rearing its lofty head some 350 feet high. It must be seen to be realized. When you see in one tree about 250,000 feet of timber, and the tree itself from 3000 to 5000 years old. Then the other species of redwood make a grand forest of themselves. Not so large as the big trees, yet some trees have been cut measuring 15 feet in diameter and having over 2000 annual rings. Other trees have been found that were fifty-five feet in circumference six feet from the ground. After the two species of redwood we have the Douglas spruce, and there are only two species of this tree, and also found in no other country. The true Douglas spruce is the very best tree that grows for all purposes. In some places it is called Oregon pine, but it is not a pine. The reddish lumber seen so much in San Francisco is from this tree. It is also very abundant in Oregon, constituting the bulk of the forests there. Then the pines are a grand forest of themselves. The sugar pine is one of the most magnificent trees of any country. They are found on this coast twenty spe-species of pine and only ten on the eastern side of the continent, and all are different species. None are found on this coast that are found on the eastern. Of the pines of this coast there are three species growing on this coast bearing the largest cones of any pines in the world.

Some estimates place the number of men who will try to get to Alaska this year at 200,000. Probably from all parts of the globe that many will start for the Polar regions, but many of them will not get within 3000 miles of the Klondike mines. Suppose half of this number succeed in actually setting foot on Alaska soil. How much money will be expended by them? To estimate $500 per capita is very conservative. It is a double madness to go to the Yukon with the intention of staying less than two years. It will cost $150 per capita for those who return to make the return trip. We then have 100,000 people, two years' time and labor and an expenditure of $65,000,000. If they succeed in digging enough gold to recoup themselves for the trip and get nothing for their time, labor and hardships in the most inclement climate beneath the skies, where living is at the hourly risk of life, they will bring back ten times more gold than any rational person looks for from that country. Let us divide this army of 100,000 stalwart men into 100 parts of 100 each, and their money into as many pools of $650,000 in each. What might they do? Each division of this army with its capital might come here to California and secure a tract of land at $30 to $50 per acre. On this they might found a sugar factory, a dairy plant, a stock farm or a great fruit orchard. In any of these enterprises they would enjoy the comforts of a perfect climate, the society of their families, the advantages of schools and all the other elements of civilized society, and be sure of a very satisfactory return for the investment of their money and the expenditure of their time and labor. In this case there is no gamble, being little possibility of failure, and there is a certainty of thorough enjoyment of life. The reason why the Klondike attracts and Southern California does not, is probably discoverable in that very certainty.—L. A. Express.

Randsburg Notes.

Correspondence Los Angeles Review:—The total product of the Yellow Aster mine (Rand group) sinc January 1 of this year, is $67,500. The clean-up for February was $36,000. The Rand Company disburses about $10,000 a month in this camp.

The Rand Comprny have an immense body of ore to work. Some of the shareholders say they have ore enough in sight to keep 100 stamps going for the next ten years.

A former superintendent of the Comstock lode declares this group equal to those celebrated mines in their palmiest days, and if water can be brought to them they will produce as much money as the famous bonanzas of Nevada. And the water will soon be there.

The Yellow Aster Mining Company is putting in a new 20-horse power noiseless friction hoist.

The Napoleon, in the Stringer district, is down 160 feet with $100 ore at the bottom. This company has never milled ore from that mine which went less than $100 to the ton.

The Wedg has been sacking $500 ore at the 100-foot level.

Northern papers give at great length an account of the venture of Chas Vest, a Portland man, who has just returned from Dawson City with a big venture in the egg trade. Mr. Vest left Portland last October, taking with him 1743 dozen frozen eggs. He broke and packed them in tin cans holding one gallon each, or six dozen. The cans were sealed, frozen and put on ice. They weighed 2025 pounds in cold storage. With one man to help him and his dogs, Mr. Vest hurried the eggs up to Sheep Camp and buried them in the snow. He put four cans in a sack and tied the sacks over the dogs backs. Each dog carried twenty eight pounds in this way. Once over the summit the cans were piled on sleds pulled by the dogs and the journey continued. Upon reaching the mining camp he sold out his eggs for $6321 cash.

The average amount of ore, says an exchange, crushed per stamp for each twenty four hours in California is about two tons. Should the average stamps in operation reach 7500 per day and night crushing, the result would be 15,500 tons a day, or 5,657,500 tons per year.

When a man ventures an opinion he will find some one who opposes it. Hence a man without opposition is a man without opinions.

The cry in the east is "Pay the Government bonds in gold!" And the cry should be added to: "If they cannot be paid in gold now, renew them and promise to pay them in gold, and continue to promise from now until the end of time." The idiocy of promising to pay all debts including interest, in one product, will naturally lead to universal repudiation of debts some day. The annual interest on debts payable in gold at the present time amounts to more than the world's stock of gold, and the pyramid of debt is increasing much more rapidly than the pyramid of gold. But men are doomed to always attempt the impossible.—East Oregonian.

Apropos of Hawaiian annexation, the following excerpt from an eastern paper covers the whole situation in a very few words: "It is claimed we ought to annex the Hawaiian Islands because Americans have thirty million dollars invested there. If that is good logic the United States ought to be annexed to England because the British have over fifteen billion dollars invested here."

It is a beautiful fact that the wave of prosperity and the discovery that a man may live without a stomach were practically simultaneous in the time of their arrival and announcement. Thus does Providence provide for the wants of the children of men in every emergency, remarks an exchange.

A company with $500,000 capital has been incorporated in Los Angeles for the purpose of building and operating a complete smelting plant.

The youthful "devil" of the INDEPENDENT office received a letter this week stating that a daughter and five grandchildren would welcome his return to Texas. He has not yet made up his mind whether it is a case of mistaken identity or that he has a poor memory.

THE BAEY'S NAME.

"Mordaunt," she called him. In a novel book
His mother found the name she gave to him;
I didn't like it, fer I'd kinder took
A sort of notion favor'ble to "Jim."
But when she looked up at me from the bed,
Half dead, but happy, an' she said: "I want
That you shall name him, after all," I said:
"Why, blame it all, of course it is Mordaunt."

She knew the way I felt about such names,
An' that this was a sacrifice, fer she
Had often heard me say that honest "James"
Had just about the proper ring fer me;
But though 'twas disapp'intment, still I thought
She was the one that had the right to choose,
An' I—there wasn't any question—ought
To reconcile my wishes to her views.

He was so delicate—so teeny small,
But smarter than the cracker of a whip;
I don't believe he ever cried at all—
Sometimes he'd pucker up his little lip
An' look at you until you was ashamed
Of all the sins you knew he knew you'd done;
I often thought he grieved because we'd named
By such a name a helpless little one.

An' thinking that, when we two was alone,
I called him by the name I liked so well;
His mother would 'a grieved if she'd 'a known,
But neither Jim nor me would ever tell.
We never told. He'd laugh and crow to hear
Me whisperin' so happ'ly to him;
'Yer name's Mordaunt, old boy, when mother's near;
But when there's only me about, it's Jim."

We never told our little secret, and
We never will—we never, never will;
Somewhere off yonder, in a flow'ry land
A little baby's toddlin', toddlin' still,
A-seekin in the sunshine all alone
The God that give an' then that sent fer him—
Mordaunt's the name carved on the little stone,
But in my heart the name is always Jim.

THE TWO MORTONS.

Dolly is the most maddening, tantalizing, perverse and charming—I might as well admit it; you'd soon have found it out—young woman of my acquaintance. I've been in love with her for five years, and it's a wonder my hair isn't white; sometimes I think it is turning gray; but when I spoke to Dolly about it she said I was not to bother; I was old enough to be gray, anyway. Ah! that's where Dolly hurts, and she knows it; for I am fifteen years older than she is, and when that willful young woman wishes to be particularly cruel she treats me with respect.

I know that among my friends I am considered to have fairly good sense; I can talk rationally on most subjects, and I stand well enough in my profession, at least enabling me to keep my head above water. But when I'm with Dolly, or in her presence, I'm an ass, a driveling, foolish ass. A lunatic from an asylum would be a brilliant conversationalist compared to me. And, alas! Dolly knows that, too, and she torments me and makes life an unutterable burden to me. I start to make a sensible remark, when suddenly I meet Dolly's eye; then I stumble and say the wrong thing, and she will remark, "Do you really think that?" with such a wicked look in her beautiful blue eyes, while I don't think at all, but have just said it. And so it goes on until I wonder sometimes if I am quite right. When we go to dances—I say we, for I'm always there if I know she is going—things are a little worse than usual, for Dolly dances past me with cads of men, and I stand about the wall watching her. She never will give but two dances to me, so I have nothing to do in the meantime but watch her.

One night I was desperate. I had sent her violets as usual—she is particularly fond of them, and most of my money goes that way. Sometimes she wears them, and often carries them, but this night they were nowhere to be seen, and in her hand was one large red rose. I went up to her; appearing to be sorry to see me was the particular form of torture which commended itself to her on this especial night. "You here!" she said, lifting her eyebrows in astonishment and without a smile; all put on, of course, because I am always where she is.

"O, no, I'm not here; I'm somewhere else," I said, wittily.

She laughed immoderately.

"You're—so—funny," she remarked, choking.

"Yes," said I, severely, "I suppose I am funny, very funny. But where are my violets?"

"Why, had you—any—violets?" said she. "I didn't know—how should I know?" She said it seriously, but there was a look in her eyes that I was used to; I'd have liked to shake her.

"Dolly, you know exactly what I mean; where are my violets?"

"If you mean the violets you sent me," she replied, with dignity, "I understood that after they left you they belonged to me; do you want them back?" This freezingly.

"Oh, Dolly," I said, reduced once more to my usual condition of asininity, "I didn't mean it, dear; I don't want the d—I beg your pardon; of course, I don't want them; I only wanted you to wear them or carry them, you know, darling."

But she saw that she had the best of me, so she carried things with a high hand.

"The rose was sent me by a friend"—she hesitated—"and I suppose I have a right to wear what I please. But sit down; don't stand so long; you'll be tired!" This was an allusion to my age, and it maddened me.

"You are exceedingly rude!" I said, turning away and leaving her.

It was the most severe speech I had ever made to Dolly, and I suffered at the thought of it. For four days I didn't go near her or send her violets once. It was an awful four days; I neither slept nor ate, but just reviled myself as a fool for becoming estranger from the only woman in the world. In my despair I even went so far as to take Jane Hunt to a dance where Dolly was sure to see us, and she did. And when I passed her she looked over my head with her small nose in the air; I wished Miss Hunt was in—well, somewhere else—that I might rush over to Dolly, throw myself at her feet—and kiss them! Yes, I acknowledge that I have often wished that.

Finally I wrote her, fully conscious that it was a very silly letter, wherein I told her I was nearly angry at myself for not knowing she cared for red roses, and I sent three dozen. The answer I received was characteristic:

"You are a silly old goose, and if you had only waited until I finished what I was saying you would have discovered that you sent the rose yourself with the violets. I don't care at all for red roses."

By which token I learned, not that Dolly was repentant, but that her violets had faded, and she wanted more. So I sent them, hundreds of them, hoping that willful and fascinating young woman would be appeased.

But the greatest of my misfortunes has not yet been set down. There was another young man, an acquaintance and admirer of Dolly's, with exactly the same name as myself—Richard Morton. I, of course, had taken a huge dislike to him; in fact, I hated him (for Dolly once remarked that he was a nice fellow), and I don't think he had an extraordinary affection for me. We were not related; I was glad of that. A few days after I had been such a cad to Dolly I called upon her, and, heaven favoring me, I found her alone.

"Dolly, dearest," I began; "I am so sorry——"

"Don't," she said; "that incident is closed. There are so many nicer things to talk about. Jane Hunt, for instance."

I shivered; I was about to be punished.

"Is she nicer?" said I.

"What do you really think of her?" said Dolly, with rather an anxious look, I thought; but, of course, I was mistaken.

"O, she's a very good girl, very good," with a desperate desire to make Dolly jealous if I could, which I couldn't.

"Is she?" Dolly tossed her head. "Well, Mr. Morton, do you want to know what I think she looks like?" The "Mr. Morton" was ominous; I shivered again.

"I can't imagine," said I, lightly, thinking how very pretty Dolly was with that pink spot in each cheek.

"I think she looks like a cook!" she declared, triumphantly, while I, inwardly agreeing, protested.

"O, Dolly, a cook!"

"Yes," she went on spitefully, "and not even like a good cook!"

"Dolly! Not like a bad cook?"

"Yes," she went on, like a very poor cook!"

I was obliged to laugh; I couldn't help it.

"Splendid wife she'd make!" said I, not meaning to rouse Dolly.

But suddenly she turned and said the most terrible thing to me that she'd ever said since I'd known her.

"Then you'd better marry her!" This from Dolly!

"O!" I began, but she was gone, and there was nothing for me to do but to pick up my hat and go, which I did, calling myself a beast and a brute as I went.

That night when leaving the theater we happened to meet a moment. She was radiant and scornful.

"Dolly," I said, resolving not to notice the contretemps of the afternoon, "with whom are you going to dance the cotillon at the Terry's to-morrow night?"

"With Mr. Morton," she answered, sweetly.

"What a dear you are! I was afraid you'd promise somebody else."

And then she laughed.

"With the pleasant, agreeable Mr. Morton," she continued, "who never says the wrong thing."

And then I knew she meant the other one! I'm afraid I said a bad word; her mocking laugh followed me in the darkness, and echoed in my dreams that night. I wished I had never seen her—and took it back immediately.

I debated a long time within myself whether or not I should go to the Terrys', but, as usual, ended by going. I could dance s'ag and take Dolly out, and—lovely idea—perhaps she would take me out! Then as I thought of the way I had left her the night before this beautiful hope faded. What would she want with a brute like me?

I never saw her look better than that night at the Terrys' dance; she was in white, which best became her, and she seemed to me like an angel. And that fellow Morton looked pretty well, too, I had to admit to myself that he was rather a well appearing chap.

Mrs. Floyd-Hopkins, who aspires to be something of a belle herself, stood for a moment and followed the direction of my glance.

"Miss Dalrymple is looking particularly well this evening," she said—a very gracious speech, indeed, for her.

"Very!" I replied, having sense enough left not to discuss Dolly with a woman.

"But what an awful flirt!" she went on. This left me gasping. "And engaged, I understand, to Mr. Morton all the time."

"Who said it?" I asked, hoarsely. Dolly engaged—and to that—cad—with my name.

"Oh, everybody says so," and then she looked at me with such an unpleasant smile. "That's your name, too, isn't it?"

"Yes, I believe it is," I said, brilliantly, moving away from her.

Dolly engaged! I couldn't grasp the full significance of it; the thought left me dazed and bewildered. This very night should decide it. I would go to her and ask if there were any truth in it. Just then she came toward me as if she were going to take me out, but something in my face must have stopped her.

"What is the matter?' she asked, turning a little white.

"Dolly," I said, sternly, "will you give me the first two dances after supper?"

"Of course, if you want them; but won't you dance now?" I never saw Dolly so meek before.

"No," I answered, almost roughly, "not now." She left me with a strange look on her sweet face.

It seemed centuries until supper; I tried to think of what I should say to her, but my mind was in such a chaotic state that I decided to depend on the inspiration of the moment.

At last supper was over, and I found her, tucked her arm in mine, and marching off to a quiet nook, put her in the only seat, and stood accusingly before her.

"Dolly," I began, "look at me!" This she did, a little timidly, I thought, and I almost forgot what I was going to say in the joy of looking at her.

"My darling," I went on, "I have loved you so long, so well, and hoped that in the course of years you might come to care"—she dropped her eyes; just then I remembered that horrible gossip—"but to-night, Dolly, I heard something that turned my heart to stone."

"What was it?" she asked.

"That you were engaged to——"

"Who?" breathlessly.

"Morton," I gasped; "that wretched, caddish——"

"Stop!" she said, with dignity.

"Tell me—you shall!" I grasped her wrists. Is it so?"

If it had been any woman in the world but Dolly I should have said she was embarrassed. She actually blushed.

"No," she said, slowly; "it is not so; but——" Her hands went up and covered her face. Heaven! suppose she should cry!

"But what?" I insisted, cruelly; "you're not engaged to him, but you're in love with him?" She took her hands away, and her face was very red; if it had not been such a serious moment I should have said she had been laughing.

"Mr. Morton has—never—asked me to be his—wife; if he does—I shall——"

I was beside myself.

"And if he does?" I hissed.

"I shall say yes"—very softly. A terrible silence ensued; the earth was sinking beneath my feet.

"You love this Mr. Morton?" I asked, sharply.

And then the very queerest thing in the world happened. Dolly's face whitened a little as she rose and put out her hand.

"Yes, you old goose," she said, "I love this Mr. Morton."

It didn't take me long to gather Dolly into my arms. The next five minutes are not to appear in this narrative.

"Dolly," said I, blissfully, "did you ever know such a stupid old fool as I am?"

"Never in all my life," said the sweetest of girls, her voice coming from the vicinity of my coat collar.

"And do you suppose that woman meant me when she told me that gossip, my darling?"

"Of course she—did," said the voice, "and I'm glad she said it; I don't believe you'd ever have asked otherwise."

My answer would not look well on paper.

"Do you know, Dick, that you never have asked me before?"

And when I came to think of it I never had.—"The Folks at Home."

Curious Russian Sects.

A curious sect in Russia is that known as the Runners, because its members run away like a sick animal to some lonely spot to die when disease overtakes them. Another is known as the Runner-Smotherers. When any member of this extraordinary sect is seized with a mortal or supposedly mortal illness, instead of being allowed to run off to die he is put out of the world by a woman whose title is the smotherer. The ceremony is, for safety's sake, generally performed, not in the victim's house, but in the common praying room, a secret room conveniently situated to escape the prying eyes of authority, and provided with numerous exits in case of a surprise. While psalms are sung and the censer swung, the old woman who usually holds the honorable office of smotherer performs her task with a small cushion held over the sick person's nose and mouth, the body being afterward secretly buried in some remote spot, whither it is conveyed under a load of some innocent matter, such as hay.—New York Tribune.

Cut After Deal.

The British telegraph authorities count "stepfather" for two words, and "grandmother" for one.

Mrs. Maschild read the information to her husband and asked: "Wonder what they count mother-in-law?"

It was his play: "Out."

And she cut the head end support of the hammock.—Truth.

Longing for Days of Youth.

ROMANTIC indeed the career of the shepherd boy David, who passed swiftly from the sheep's cote to the king's palace. But the palace, with its soft, silken ease, threatened simplicity, and with luxury came self-indulgence. Tempted, the king was false to his people, to the chivalry of arms, the friend betrayed his friend. Soon the outraged people threatened revolution, and fearing the public wrath the king fled from his capital, to be hunted like a partridge upon the mountains. Once they found out his stronghold, his enemies besieged the king and prepared to starve him out. Then, like Dante, David learned the bitterness of the exile's lot. Like Rob Roy, he saw himself engirt with fire. In that hour conscience stirred consciousness, and remorse slew all happy memories. In bitter agony David realized that he had fallen out of good men's regard. His palace seemed only a hut, his purple robes were rags, his scepter was a broken reed. Then as by a lightning flash he retrod the dark road by which he had descended. In that hour what treasure would he not have given to return to the old days. Gone forever those happy hours when with eyes big with wonder he played in his father's vineyard. Gone the white robes of his innocence! Gone his sensitive revulsion from the thoughts of evil! Gone his eager, tremulous hunger for friendship, pity and goodness. Oh, it was a piteous tragedy—its pathos and pain—the treasures of youth lost forever, and providence preserved for mankind the king's bitter cry.—Dr. N. D. Hillis.

The Christ of the Ages.

Look, child of time, He comes, the Son of God!
First promise to the fathers from of old!
His steps, through the long ages, marked with blood,
He comes to die the death so long foretold.
First and last promise, lo! he comes, he comes,
To fight our battle, crush the serpent's head,
To conquer death, to burst earth's iron tombs,
Himself the Lord of living and of dead.
The prophet's eye is dim,
The prophet's lips are dumb,
But He, the prophet's theme,
The woman's seed, has come!

Creation's gladness, hope of weary man,
How clear thy splendor, though but seen afar!
Light of the universe, long pale and wan,
Now rising in thy strength, heaven's sweetest star.
Son of the Blessed, lo! he comes at last,
The songs of ages now in him fulfilled,
God manifest in flesh. The night is past,
And the true day begins to be revealed.
The prophet's eye is dim,
The prophet's lips are dumb,
But He, the prophet's theme,
The woman's seed, has come!

He comes to bear our sins, to soothe our woe,
To die the death which only he can die;
To do the work which only he can do,
And lift the lost one up to stand on high.
With crown and scepter, lo! he comes to reign,
As Prince of Peace to sheathe war's wasting sword;
With glory, honor, blessing, in his train,
He comes, creation's righteous Heir and Lord.
The prophet's eye is dim,
The prophet's lips are dumb,
But He, the prophet's theme,
The woman's seed, has come!

—Horatius Bonar.

The Cross and Happiness.

Where work wears out one, worry wears out thousands. There is less happiness among the great than among the humble; among the rich men than among the poor. "But if these limitations could only be removed!" "If I did not have to work so hard!" "If I could be my best self!" "If I could have that for which I know I am fitted!" Ah! greatness of gift always implies greatness of responsibility; if one limitation goes another comes; that which seems to give freedom only increases slavery. Almost all men, like birds, beat themselves against their cages, longing to get into some different world, to soar beneath some more splendid skies, ignorant of the abysses in that larger world and of the storms which sweep those skies. Of the Master it was said: "Who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross." The cross preceded the joy, as the mountain climb is before the vision of the earth and sky. The Stoic said: "The way to be happy is to cease to desire or aspire;" in other words, deny yourself. Christ's message is: "The surest way to be happy is the way of the cross. Sacrifice yourself. Make all you possibly can; give every faculty its fullest development; be as beautiful, as cultured, as wise as circumstances will permit, not that you may be happy, but that you may use powers, faculties, gifts, as I have used mine—for humanity. In that way, and that alone, lies happiness."—Amory H. Bradford, D. D.

A Great Life.

Do not try to do some great thing or you may waste all your life waiting for the opportunity which may never come. But since little things are always claiming your attention, do them as they come, from a great motive, for the glory of God, to win His smile of approval, and to do good to men. It is harder to plod on in obscurity acting thus than to stand in the high places of the field, within the view of all, and do deeds of valor at which rival armies stand still to gaze. But no such act goes without the swift recognition and the ultimate recompense of Christ. To fulfill the duties of your station; to use to the uttermost the gifts of your ministry; to bear the chafing annoyances and trivial irritations as martyrs bore the pillory and stake; to find the one noble trait in people who try to molest you; to put the kindest construction on unkind acts and words; to love with love of God even the unthankful and evil; to be content to be a fountain in the midst of a wild valley of stones, nourishing a few lichens and wild flowers, or now and again a thirsty sheep, and to do this always, and not for the praise of man, but for the sake of God—this makes a great life.—F. B. Meyer.

The Power of God.

The exceeding greatness of the power of God toward us who believe is the very same power that wrought in Christ to raise Him from the dead, to set Him at God's right hand and to put all things under His feet. It does the very same for us. It raises us from the death of sin into the newness of spiritual life; it places us in divine security and it subdues under us all our foes.

All Around the Globe.

The international Christian Endeavor convention will meet in Nashville July 6-11, 1898.

There are 1,400 Mormon missionaries now at work, and they travel and labor without salary.

Nineteen of the mayors of corporations in England are active members of the Wesleyan church.

George K. Reed of Lancaster, Pa., has recently given $2,000 to the Y. M. C. A. library of that city.

The oldest society of Christian Endeavor in Texas is connected with the Second Presbyterian Church of Dallas.

The Louden Tablet makes the statement that the Catholic Church in England receives from 600 to 700 converts a month.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational Church at Kewanee, Ill., has organized a night school in that place.

Huldah M. Beebe, a Quaker missionary, well known in New England, New York and Pennsylvania, recently died at the age of 87.

One hundred and seventy-five missionaries, 800 Bible women and 16,000 pupils in schools are supported by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Rev. Dr. John Watson (Ian Maclaren) has been called to the pastorate of the Kensington congregation. His salary will be £1,000. In his present pastorate in Liverpool he receives a salary of £1,200.

Arrangements are well in hand for the international council of the Congregational church to be held in 1899 in Boston. The English committee, consisting of prominent ministers of that denomination, has unanimously resolved to recommend that Principal Fairbairn of Mansfield College, Oxford, England, be invited to preach the sermon.

England's Stage Beauty.

Miss Julia Neilson can lay claim to being not only the most classically beautiful, but also the tallest woman on the British stage. Alma-Tadema considers hers the ideal Greek figure, and he is very fond of designing her costumes. On more than one occasion he has even suggested various ways in which her hair might be done. Miss Neilson, whenever it is possible, always wears her own hair on the stage. She has had the advantage of being coached by her sister-in-law, Miss Ellen Terry.—Argonaut.

Tom—"Did you give Miss Gotrox a Christmas present?" Jack—"I tried to. Offered her myself, you know." Tom—"And she refused you?" Jack—"I suppose that's what it amounts to. She said she didn't believe it was right for a girl to accept very costly gifts."—Brooklyn Life.

"Do you know why it is that so many explorers seek the Arctic and so few the Antarctic regions?" "Well, I think I could make a pretty good guess." "Why?" "The Arctic regions are not quite so far away from the headquarters of the managers of the lecture bureaus."—Chicago Post.

Mrs. Hymen—"I am afraid you do not think so much of me, Charles, as you used to. I can remember when you declared I was worth my weight in gold." Mr. Hymen—"That's what I still say, but you must remember that you have lost at least twenty pounds the last year."—Boston Transcript.

"What do you think? My wife's father told me before we got married that he would give me a handsome present on our wedding day." "And didn't he?" "Well, I waited over a week, and as he didn't mention the subject, I asked him for it; and all he said was: 'Why, didn't I give you my daughter?'"—Philadelphia Bulletin.

"Of course," he said, reflectively, "I am not making any complaint about it. All I desire to say is that I can't understand it." "You can't understand what?" inquired his wife. "Why can you put gilded spheres and gaudy fabrics all over a Christmas tree six feet high and four thick for seventy-five cents, when it costs at least $18 to trim a bonnet four inches in diameter."—Washington Star.

Merchant (presenting itemized statement)—"Look that over, Mr. Litteral, and send me a check at your leisure. And, by the way, let me congratulate you on your marriage. I must say that the lady is one of the most charming it was ever my pleasure to meet. I am certain she must make you a most excellent wife." Mr. Literal (examining statement)—"I must confess that she fills the bill."—Boston Courier.

The haughty young type-writer drew herself to her queenly height. "George Vermillion," she said, in icy tones, "no once could mistake your attentions to me. My lawyer says I have a beautiful case. Either I will sue you for breach of promise or else you must give me the legal right to write 'Mrs. George Vermillion' on my calling cards." "Write it?" gasped the unhappy employer; 'great Caesar, girl, you can't even spell it!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

FUNNY FINISH TO A FEUD.

Ormondes and Desmonds Had Quarreled for Six Centuries.

It is seldom in this workaday age that one encounters a genuine family feud inherited from sire to son through no less than six centuries. Such a feud actually existed in the dominions of Queen Victoria until a short time ago, and its final settlement was brought about by the ingeniousness of a boy of 9.

The two leading Anglo-Irish families in Ireland had long been the FitzGeralds and the Butlers. From being comrades in arms of the invading Strongbow they became by degrees rival barons and fierce contestants for the vice sovereignty of their adopted country. In the wars of the roses the Butlers sided with the white rose of Lancaster, the FitzGeralds with the red rose of York. Factions gathered around the two great houses and the bitter feud brought forth death and bloodshed from as early as 1250 down to the Williamite wars. The Butlers, whose chief had obtained the dignity of Earl of Ormonde, succeeded in crushing the power of the elder branch of the FitzGeralds, Earls of Desmond. It is told of a warlike Desmond that while being borne prisoner on the locked shields of his feudal foe's clansmen the Butlers taunted him with the bitter words:

"Where is now the proud FitzGerald?"

To which the indomitable earl answered:

"FitzGerald is where he ought to be—on the necks of the Butlers."

This proud reply will give an idea of the intensity of the strife.

Now, it happened that her majesty's Irish viceroy gave a garden party in the viceregal lodge at Dublin, and thither were bidden by accident the Marquis of Ormonde, head of the Butler family (familiar to the Americans through his yachting interests), and the little Duke of Leinster, boyish chieftain of the house of FitzGerald. With the duke, who was not quite 9 years of age, came his widowed mother, one of the beautiful Duncombe sisters.

The Duchess of Leinster lost sight of her son for a space, and in going to look for the lad found him engaged in earnest conversation with a tall, elderly gentleman, in whom she was surprised to recognize the Marquis of Ormonde. What was her horror when, on approaching nearer, she distinctly heard the youthful Geraldine remark in somewhat slangy phrase:

"Well, I suppose I ought to punch your head on account of the feud; but I say, you know, you're too jolly decent a chap for that. Can't we shake hands and call it square?"

With the utmost gravity Lord Ormonde grasped the small hand of his hereditary foe, and when the amused mother came to congratulate them on the happy settlement of 600 years of bitterness she found young hopeful perched, like his famous ancestor, on the neck of the Butler.

Thus ended a feud, undoubtedly one of the oldest and possibly the bloodiest in the world.

WIFE OF TAMMANY'S CHIEF.

Mrs. Richard Croker a Good Mother and a Devout Church Woman.

Wherever American newspapers are read, Richard Croker's name is known in connection with Greater New York's first municipal campaign, but the Tammany leader in the role of husband and father and head of a household is a character quite unfamiliar to the public. In these roles he is described as "delightfully old-fashioned."

It was twenty-four years ago that Richard Croker and Miss Elizabeth Fraser were married. She was 19 years old and a beauty. He was 28 and was always referred to as a "promising young man." It was a love match, the surest foundation for a happy home. They commenced life on a humble scale. Mrs. Croker was a favorite in the neighborhood. She has not lost a whit of her early charm of manner.

She went to early mass then and she does so still. Her hand soothed many a fevered brow in those days. She is still charitable still keenly sympathetic. She is still a handsome woman. She is tall and well proportioned. Her features are delicate and regular. Her eyes are dark, with finely arched brows. Her hair is black. Her cheeks have the hue of health.

Early in September, when the political campaign was opened, Mr. Croker left the home on 74th street and took up his residence at a hotel. This move by the chief of Tammany is a mark of consideration toward his family and servants. Mrs. Croker is an indulgent wife and housekeeper. "Mrs. Croker doesn't know the name of the County Clerk nor Sheriff and I am glad of it," her famous husband has been heard to say, and the mere mention of women in politics brings a frown to his brow.

A good word might be said in favor of congress gaiters, but shoes with tongues should be able to speak for themselves.

County of Inyo }

TO Thomas McDonnough.

You are hereby notified that I have expended $600 00 in labor and improvements upon those certain mines or mining claims situated in Beveridge Mining District, Inyo County, California, commonly known as called the Bronco mine, Porter mine and the Brittian mine, as will appear by certificates filed in the office of the County Recorder of said Inyo county, in order to hold said premises for the years 1896 and 1897, under the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, being the amount required to hold the same for the two years ending December 31, 1897. And if within 90 days after the publication of this notice you fail or refuse to contribute your proportion of such expenditure as co owner, to-wit: $150,00, your interest in said claim will become the property of the subscriber under said section 2324, and under Section 1 of an Act entitled "An Act relating to the working, right of way, easements and drainage of mines in the State of California," Approved March 31st, 189 R. C. SPEAR.

Proposals for Boarding County Prisoners.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county, at the office of the County Clerk until Thursday, April 7, 1898, up to the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. of said day for the boarding of Inyo county prisoners in the County Jail in Independence and at the Bishop Branch Jail—separate bids for each—for the term of one year, beginning July 1, 1898 and ending June 30, 1899. Said bids to designate the price per diem for each prisoner, and said board to be paid for by warrants drawn upon the General Expense Fund upon bills duly verified and presented at the regular meetings of said Board of Supervisors.

Bids must be indorsed "Proposals for Boarding County Prisoners," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. on said 7th day of April, 1898, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Attest: Chairman.
D. J. Hession, Clerk.

Proposals for Advertising Delinquent Tax List.

Notice is hereby given that pursuant to an order of the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county, State of California, made January 6 1898 sealed proposals will be received for publishing the list of delinquent Taxes of said county and State for the fiscal year 1897-98. The first publication thereof to be made on or within five days before or after the first Monday in June from copy to be furnished by Tax Collector. Bidders must state the rate per square of two hundred and forty ems for the first and each subsequent insertion, for the time designated by, and including such postponements as may be ordered by said Tax Collector.

All bids must be endorsed "Proposals for Publishing Delinquent Tax List," and addressed to the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, and will be received up to and not later than the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. on Thursday, the 7th day of April, 1898, and opened by said Board on the seventh day of April, 1898, between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. of said day, the right to reject any and all bids being reserved.

Attest: Chairman.
D. J Hession, Clerk.

Proposals for Care of the Indigent Sick of Inyo County.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California at the office of the County Clerk until, and not later than 10 o'clock, a m., on Thursday, April 7, 1898, to contract for the care of the indigent sick of Inyo County for the term of one year beginning July 1, 1898, and ending June 30, 1899.

Said bids to designate the amounts for which parties contracting will maintain all indigent sick properly admitted to contractor's care, on the basis of an average of four patients per day throughout the year; to include all medicine, nursing, board, lodging and washing, and the burial and funeral expenses of any indigent sick person who may die while under such maintenance and care. Said bids must designate the price per person at which all excess of patients over the average of four each day throughout the year will be cared for, such excess to be paid for by extra allowance on presentation of bills, duly verified at the regular meeting of said Board immediately after said contract has expired—the average of four per day to be paid for at the regular meetings of the Board, on bills duly verified, by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund of said county.

The person or persons to whom said contract shall be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price for the faithful performance of said contracts.

The maintenance care and management of such indigent sick by such contractor shall be at all times subject to the inspection of said Board of Supervisors, or any member thereof, or any person appointed by the Board for such purpose.

Bids must be indorsed "Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. on said 7th day of April, 1898, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Attest: Chairman.
D. J. Hession, Clerk.

Proposals for Services of County Physician.

Notice is hereby given by the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, that sealed proposals will be received by said Board, at the office of the County Clerk until 10 a. m., and not later, on Thursday, April 7, 1898, for the services of a Physician qualified under the provisions of "An Act for the Regulation of the Practice of Medicine and Surgery in the State of California," attending the indigent sick in charge of the contractor for the care of such persons for the term of one year, beginning July 1, 1898, and ending June 30, 1899.

Said bids to designate the amount per annum for which said Physician will give due and regular medical and surgical attendance upon said sick, and also all such services as may be required for prisoners in charge of the Sheriff.

The person to whom said contract may be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price for the faithful performance of such duties. Said service to be paid for by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund, upon presentation of bills duly verified, at the regular meetings of said Board.

Bids to be indorsed "Proposals for Service of County Physician," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m., and 2 o'clock p. m., of said 7th day of April 1898, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Dressing the Hair.

Real tortoise shell combs in various handsome patterns are coming into marked favor. If this proves true, the projected style of dressing the hair low on the head, as recently determined upon, will not have a monopoly. There is no reason why the high Spanish comb, with the coiffure en pompadour on the one hand and the coil or braid of hair worn on the nape of the neck on the other, should not severally prevail, in addition to the psyche knot, arranged at the center of the back of the head, from which fall a number of short zephyr curls.

A Woman Brakeman.

A woman brakeman is the latest innovation in a field heretofore held inviolate to man. Mrs. Jessie Mulligan, the widow of James Mulligan, a railroad conductor who was killed on the Yellowstone division of the Northern Pacific railroad six months ago, is now working for the company in the capacity of freight train brakeman. She is reported as taking kindly to her new sphere of activity, setting brakes, coupling cars, turning switches and performing various other duties as well as the ordinary brakeman.

DEMAND FOR MORE BATTLESHIPS.

The Secretary of the Navy has demanded more battleships and there can be no doubt that Congress will consider his recommendations. Protection is what our sea ports require, and fortifications will not adequately supply this. Defense against all disorders of a malarial type is, however, adequately afforded by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, an efficient remedy, also, for constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism and nervousness.

SCIENCE AND INVENTION

A German investigation has shown that, in addition to the ordinary magnetic phenomena of the earth, there occur at times magnetic waves or disturbances having periods ranging from fifteen to thirty seconds.

At Ruhrort, the coal and iron center of Germany, a scheme is being floated to erect a central station and distribute electrical energy for lighting and power to the many surrounding manufacturing establishments.

One of the latest horseless carriages in France is adjusted to take the place of engines on steam railway tracks for the delivery of mail late at night in small villages, which is required by the government. The railroads find their use an economic advantage.

The same amount of nutrition is contained in a quart of milk, three-quarters of a pound of fat beef or five ounces of wheat flour. Milk is a perfect type of food, but only for the young. It fails to furnish the necessary amount of heat and force in adults.

One of the uses of skimmed milk is in the manufacture of an artificial ivory, which in most respects resembles the original. The milk is mixed with borax and subjected to a high pressure. The product is well suited for combs, billiard balls and pipe mouthpieces.

Dr. Sabouraud, in the Annales de Dermatologie, firmly believes that baldness is contagious, and that barbers' instruments are most common carriers of the contagion; but as customers come and go from one barber shop to another, it is difficult to trace each case to its source.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has recently applied electricity to a new use—that of working turntables for locomotives. Four men were required to turn a locomotive by hand, at a cost of 12 cents per locomotive, whereas the electrical machine reduces the cost to half a cent. The saving effected will be about $700 a year.

A French physician has proved to a certainty that the contagious period in whooping cough comes previous to the appearance of the "whoop." Now the question arises, How are children to be guarded against the contagion, and of what use is it to quarantine them against going to school after the "whoop" has made it evident that they have the disease. Physicians are now studying these new problems.

The steamer Warrimo, from Australia, brings advices as follows: H. M. S. Penguin has just returned to Fiji after surveying the proposed Pacific cable route from Suva to Honolulu. The bottom of the ocean was found to be very uneven. One or two uncharted patches near Honolulu were discovered, but, as they have seven or eight fathoms of water over them, they are not dangerous to navigation.

The average person believes that in reading a newspaper paragraph he reads the whole of each type's impression, while, in fact, he only notices the upper half of each letter. Cover the upper half of a line with a sheet of paper, being careful to hold the paper exactly in the middle of the letters, and you will not, without difficulty, decipher a word. Then place the paper over the lower half of the line. It can be read without the slightest trouble.

It appears from the experiments of a French scientific man that oak trees are in more danger than other trees of being struck by lightning. Beeches, on the contrary, are not good conductors of electricity. The danger of trees from lightning is great in proportion to the electrical conductibility of their wood. Dead trees and dead wood generally form a much better conductor than living, growing woods, which offer great resistance.

It is proposed to put in special water-pipes in New York for extinguishing fires, the salt water to be taken from the river front. It is claimed that such pipes would reduce insurance rates so largely as to justify construction. They might be so arranged as to be used by the fire-extinguishing boats now employed to protect buildings on the water-front from conflagration. The aggregate value of buildings and property between Chambers Street and 14th street, New York, is put at $500,000,000. A 5 per cent. reduction on the insurance rates on such property would be enough to lay many blocks of the proposed water-mains.

An English chemist has recently analyzed a sample of a silk dress that was submitted to him by a lady. He found that it contained only a fraction over 48 per cent. of silk, and as much tin was found in it as that present in poor tin ores from Cornwall. The tin occurs in the so-called weighting of the silk. The chemist states that he at once realized the fact that the silk dresses worn by the ladies in Regent street and Bond street, London, taken together, would represent a Cornish tin-mine of very fair quality. He was informed by an expert that the silk he had examined would not stand more than three months' steady wear.

It is known that iron, even when carefully covered with a coating of paint, still shows a tendency to rust. This has usually been attributed to minute cracks in the paint caused by the action of cold and heat, under whose influence the iron and the paint do not expand and contract equally. But experiments in Germany have led to the conclusion that there is another cause at work, namely, that paint, when swollen by moisture, is pervious to both water and gases. Under such circumstances oxidation can take place beneath it. Paint that contains the largest possible quantity of oil is the best for protecting iron.

The gold of Alaska, on which the attention of mankind is just now fixed with brilliant anticipation, may not, in the end, turn out to be the greatest treasure which that land possesses. The Alaskan forests appear to be among the most valuable in existence. Extending from Cross Sound, a little south of Mount Fairweather, to the Strait of Juan de Fuca, partly in Alaska and partly in British Columbia, lies what Garden and Forest describes as the greatest continuous body of timber of the cone-bearing or pine family in the world, "almost unmarked as yet by the ax, safe from fire, and of easy access." Security from fire, due to the moist climate, is regarded as one of the chief causes of the continues existence of these magnificent forests.

Stiffened cement has recently been used successfully in the construction of a boat. The frame is of steel bars a third of an inch in diameter, over which is spread a wire netting. On this the cement is laid, and the outer surface is polished. The boat is heavier than if it were built of wood, but is cheaper, and slips better through the water. Experiments have proved its strength.

THIRTY-NINE YEARS IN BED.

Queer Whim of an English Woman Who Died Quite Recently.

A spinster lady of fortune died a short time ago at Teignmouth, Devonshire, who for the last thirty-nine years had led a most extraordinary life.

One evening in the year 1858, being then in her 38th year, and in perfect health, she retired to rest as usual. The following morning she remarked that bed was the most comfortable place in the world, and announced her intention of remaining there for the rest of her natural life. And she did.

From that day until the day upon which she was placed in her coffin she never got up again, although remaining to within a few months of her death in the best of health. For two years she lay in an upstairs room, but for the last thirty-seven her bed was placed in one on the ground floor, commanding the entrance to the house and grounds. From this vantage point, by an ingenious arrangement of mirrors, she could see everything that went on around the house and in the gardens, while her sense of hearing became so acute that nothing transpired inside its four walls which escaped her attention.

Neither the death of her father nor that of her mother, which took place after she had retired for this long rest, operated to alter her resolution. On the latter's decease she found herself possessor of the property. She had the house locked up at 9 o'clock every night and the keys put on a table at her bedside. She proved an excellent woman of business, transacting all her affairs, managing her servants, entertaining her guests and revising her visiting list, without turning a counterpane, so to speak. Neither did she change her diet in any way, but, despite her recumbent habit of life, continued to eat her usual meals, dining at 8 and consuming such things as ducks, game, peaches, pork and all things indigestible and taking her coffee and liquors regularly all her life.

Doctors visited her, but she had no need of their prescriptions, and it was only a few months ago that the effects of her extraordinary manner of life began to be visible. Then she gradually broke up. The medical men who made a post-mortem examination of her remains found that her heart and lungs were free from disease, so that had she led an ordinary existence she would in all probability have lived for another ten or fifteen years. At her death, at the age of 77, she weighed nearly seventeen stone, and the coffin in which she was buried was considered the largest ever made in South Devon. She was no miser, but lived well, gave freely and handed on her fortune unimpaired to her collateral descendants.—London Mail.

Farm Hands in Cuba.

Many newspaper writers have remarked on the youthfulness and apparent stupidity of the regulars in Cuba. I suppose 75 per cent of them are under 25, says a writer in The Arena. They are mostly plowboys, freshly caught by the conscription, and shipped across the seas without any training or drill whatever. Spain has kept her older troops at home to protect herself against the Carlists and the Republicans, who are supposed to be plotting against the Government.

These boys are set down far from home, in a strange land, where yellow fever and smallpox prevail by turns the year round. They are treated with the greatest brutality by their officers, robbed by the commissaries, insufficiently clothed and fed, shot down from ambush by enemies whom they cannot see and cannot catch, and are paid irregularly or not at all. Can such soldiers be expected to prove efficient?

I have seen a whole company crying like children because one of their number had received a letter from home, and the rest were homesick. I have seen a major general in the Spanish army lash a private over his face and head with a whip, because the man did not notice his approach and failed to salute him quickly enough. I have seen half a dozen of these soldiers scrambling on the floor of a coffee house for a few coppers contemptuously thrown to them by an American correspondent. Are these the proud soldiers of Spain, the descendants of the foot soldiery that were the terror of Europe a few centuries ago?

Weighing the Earth.

The earth has been weighed by the scientists of the present century, who have ascertained that the weight of the earth is 5,852 trillions of tons or thereabouts. They found the force of attraction by certain bodies of known dimensions, and then, the size of the earth and its attractive force being known, they worked out the problem.—New York Evening Journal.

Curtail Their Privileges.

The privileges of the young men of to-day are being slowly undermined. At St. Louis those who are bonded by the surety companies are reported to their employers if seen hanging around a stage door or frequenting the society of theatrical women. Taking a soubrette to supper almost risks the forfeiture of a bond.

England's Big Merchant Marine.

The merchant ships of the United Kingdom have more than 12,000,000 tonnage; no European power has so much as 2,000,000.

You are always grumbling about the boys having dirty hands. Look at your own hands occasionally, particularly during very cold weather.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Chance.—A big bank account will not make a man. Give your boy the same chance that you have had. Throw him overboard.—Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, Presbyterian, Chicago, Ill.

God Is Near.—God hovers by his spirit over us, and the tired child is wooed to rest and soothed to slumber even in the midst of earth's throng and press.—Dr. J. W. Weddell, Baptist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Nobility.—Man is noble by reason of the position he occupies—his apexing nature; his intimacy with and union with God. Man is noble in his destiny.—Rev. S. E. Young, Presbyterian, Newark, N. J.

Industry.—Eternal industry is the price of success in the kingdom of grace. God is saying to the modern church that territory shall be hers which she measures off with the soles of her feet.—Rev. A. H. Stephens, Presbyterian, Chicago, Ill.

No More War.—The commercial interests of the nations of the world are becoming more complex and more reciprocal every year. So much is this the case that war is becoming more and more unlikely.—Rev. H. W. Reed, Presbyterian, Toronto, Ontario.

Modern Society.—Society has always had its own religion, and in our day it has reached a high or low stage, according as you have a mind to call it, apart from what we understand to be the religion of Christ.—Rev. George C. Lorimer, Baptist, Boston, Mass.

Oppression.—The world is getting very weary of the weighty arm of oppression, whether it be military or industrial. Unconsciously men are yearning for the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.—Rev. F. M. Carson, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Soul Culture.—Christianity is in the highest sense soul culture. It has assumed the task of stamping man's spiritual nature with the image of God and of developing all the graces of which the soul is possessed.—Rev. J. M. Cromer, Lutheran, Kansas City, Mo.

The Children.—All of us ought to live more in the lives of our children than we do. They will not be children always. The little feet will not be pattering on the stairs very long. Be patient and loving and tender.—Rev. George B. Vosburgh, Baptist, Denver, Colo.

The Individual.—Let not one of us think for a moment that he is not welcome to Christ. Nay, he would draw all to him. We have but to yield ourselves to his attraction and we shall find ourselves getting ever nearer.—Rev. B. Ezra Ely, Jr., Presbyterian, Rockford, Ill.

Misery.—Gold is tried by fire, a brave man by misery. The word of the ancient Greek dramatist who so frequently probed the very depths of the soul remains forever true, "He who achieves must suffer, so sounds the primeval decree."—Rabbi D. Philippson, Hebrew, Cincinnati, O.

Like the Hawk.—As the hawk pouncing upon the choiring birds causes each lark and robin to disappear and causes silence to be where sweet song was, thus fear and worry are birds of ill omen that silence the heart's hope and happiness.—Rev. Dr. N. D. Hillis, Independent, Chicago, Ill.

God and Man.—We get our conception of man from our conception of God. A man who has but little faith in a Creator has less faith in the creation of that Creator. A man who does not believe in a future will not believe in a very high moral present.—Rev. Dr. Roughton, Methodist, Cincinnati, O.

RECKLESS TRICK RIDER.

William Shields the Best Acrobatic Wheelman in This Country.

A man who prefers to ride on the handle bars of his bicycle rather than in the saddle and who is happier when suspended over the front wheel of his machine than when properly balanced over the pedals is something of a degenerate among wheelmen, but a degenerate whose example is not likely to be followed too extensively. This eccentric rider is William Shields, better known as "Rube." He is a professional cyclist and a trick rider, but he doesn't confine his performances to indoor audiences.

Shields is doubtless the best acrobat wheelman in this country. March 31, 1897, he rode down the steps of the west front of the capitol building at Washington, D. C. Dozens have ridden down the east steps, but Shields is the only wheelman who has successfully made the descent of the west flight, which has seventy-four steps and three landings. He made the descent in fifteen seconds and did not touch one of the last sixteen steps. In Cincinnati last July he electrified a crowd of spectators by riding out of a second-story window on a ladder. The crowd expected to see him dashed senseless, if not dead, at its foot. He shot down the rungs, however, and landed safely in the street.

That which a man dreads most in marriage a woman thinks most of.

If a Mary writes her name Mae or Marie, that settles it; she can't cook.

Our Foremothers.

The Tribune has no desire to insist the word "she" shall always be placed before or after the word "he" in order that women may have their fair share of recognition. It is quite willing to accept the generic use of masculine terms and to claim woman's right to vote under the masculine pronoun as now they are taxed under it and would be punished under it if they commit any crime. Still it is refreshing to find this nation's obligations to women as well as men clearly and definitely recognized in the halls of congress, where they have been treated with scant consideration. Senator Allen of Nebraska, in his resolution for the recognition of the independence of Cuba, which he introduced on the third day of this session, pointedly included women among those who had laid the foundations of this nation's liberty. He said:

"When the splendid men and women of 1776, by their valor and devotion to the cause of liberty, erected the standard of a republic on this continent and tore down the banner of King George and threw it into the street, all Europe said they were incapable of self government and that a republic would be a failure, but we can thank those men and women for statesmanship and patriotism of a high order and for placing us in possession of a continent where true manhood and womanhood are above all other considerations and where they count for so much."—Woman's Tribune.

If Denver Women Had Their Way.

If the women of Denver had the doing—

The auditorium would be built.

Carlsbad would materialize.

The short line to Cripple Creek would be a "go."

Taxes would be lowered.

Interest would be lessened.

Arbitration would flourish.

The necessity for labor strikes would disappear.

Denver would retain and use its own franchises.

It would be sure extermination to stuffing ballot boxes.

The merry gambolier would emigrate.

Bank failures would be a dangerous pastime.

Sunday closing would close.

The curfew law would be enforced or repealed.

Politics would vanish from the fire and police service.

Injunctions to keep the nickel in the slot machines running would be unheard of, as well as the judges who would grant them.

These are not all the reforms that would come if women had their way, but they are enough to promise in one day.—Colorado Women's News.

A Pleasure Book.

One of the women's magazines gave an account a few months ago of a woman who kept a "pleasure book." She had had a great deal of affliction in her life, but she believed that at least one pleasant thing happened to everybody in the course of each day. To test her theory she kept a brief diary of the pleasant things, and for years not a day passed that she was not able to record some pleasure, if only a small one.

This struck the present writer as a good idea, and last Thanksgiving day she started a pleasure book. It has proved such a source of gratification and such an encouragement to cheerfulness that she hereby recommends it to all her friends, especially to those who are apt to be at all low spirited. Keep a pleasure book!—Alice Stone Blackwell in Boston Woman's Journal.

Women on Municipal Boards.

Mayor Malster of Baltimore is so appreciative of the aid already rendered by women in the management of public institutions of which women are inmates that it is altogether probable several new women members will soon be added to the municipal boards. Of the three women who are serving with much acceptance Mrs. E. A. Robinson is a member of the jail board, and Miss Kate McLane and Dr. Mary Sherwood are trustees of the poor. Dr. Sherwood, who is a specially brilliant woman, is a native of Ballston Spa, N. Y., and a former Vassar professor.

FIBROID TUMOR

Expelled by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

MRS. B. A. LOMBARD, Box 71, Westdale, Mass., writes: "I have reason to think that I would not be here now if it had not been for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cured me of a fibroid tumor in my womb.

"Doctors could do nothing for me, and they could not cure me at the hospital. I will tell you about it:

"I had been in my usual health, but had worked quite hard. When my monthly period came on, I flowed very badly. The doctor gave me medicine, but it did me no good. He said the flow must be stopped if possible, and he must find the cause of my trouble.

"Upon examination, he found there was a fibroid tumor in my womb, and gave me treatment without any benefit whatever. About that time a lady called on me, and recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; said she owed her life to it. I said I would try it, and did. Soon after the flow became more natural and regular. I still continued taking the Compound for some time. Then the doctor made an examination again, and found everything all right. The tumor had passed away, and that dull ache was gone."

It can be truthfully stated that such a result can be accomplished by no other remedy upon the market, and forcibly proves the peculiar virtue of the Vegetable Compound

She came, how sweet and fair she came
To our rude earth, and stayed awhile,
A tender spirit, free from blame,
And lit with an angelic smile.
Ah me! that smiles so sweet should fade
From lips that in the grave are laid.

She was so young, the light intense
That seemed to guard her from her birth
Spoke but of stainless innocence,
And purity too great for earth.
Ah me! that light so pure should fade
From eyes that in the grave are laid.

And then she left us, as a barque
White winged sinks dimly from our sight,
Or as some sweet song-burdened lark
Soars upward to the realms of light.
Ah me! that youth and hope should fade
When beauty in the grave is laid.
—Chambers' Journal.

AS IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

"MURDER! Murder! Help! Murder!" It was a woman's shrill scream that rang out on the murky air and caused a great commotion on the usually quiet street. Men ran, hatless, from their supper tables; women with frightened faces followed.

"What has happened? What can be the matter?" they asked each other.

"The cries came from Dean's," one man said, making haste in that direction.

From up and down the street people came running, and in the dusk they crowded and hindered each other, and the opposite streams met and jammed the gate at Dean's. But men leaped the low pickets and rushed around the house, for whatever it meant the disturbance was in the back yard.

Almost instantly one came hurrying back.

"Neighbors," he shouted, "there has been murder done! Mr. Dean has been killed! He is lying there, all blood, his head split with an axe. Somebody go for a doctor," he called back from the corner of the house.

"Police! Police!" some one yelled.

The increasing crowd swarmed inside and overran the yard and filled the house and surged to and fro, excited and eager for a glimpse of the unfortunate victim.

Bulletins for the information of the hindmost were sent back, second by second, from mouth to mouth, by those nearest the scene of the tragedy, and whose imaginations supplied them with their knowledge of the facts, and many were the contradictory statements that flew about and enlarged themselves in passing, as is natural and usual.

The messengers dispatched for doctor and police spread the news as they ran, and on returning heard on the outskirts of the crowd that stretched far up the street that not only Mr. Dean, but Mrs. Dean, and even the two children, had ben butchered in cold blood. The screams were from the servant girl, who had found the mangled bodies, etc.

So does human nature love the horrible, and gloat over it.

As Mr. Dean was cashier of the bank, the President and other officers were notified by swift and willing volunteers, and presently they added themselves and their neighbors to the human mass of excitement and curiosity.

It was at last definitely learned that no one was hurt but Mr. Dean; that no one else happened to be at home at the time; that Mrs. Dean, returning late from something somewhere, had found him lying in the back yard apparently dead.

A few of the bystanders were so fortunate as to get a fleeting view of the inert figure as it was carried into the house; and then the police with their bludgeons undertook to drive out the crowd.

"Off with you!" they cried. "If you stamp and prance all over the place, how do you think anybody is going to find a trace of the murderer?"

"Yah, much good you'll do!" jeered one.

"That's so! Much good you'll do!" repeated another, taking it up. "I'd like to know what the police amounts to anyway when a man can be murdered in broad daylight within two blocks of the square."

"We might all be murdered in our yards and you not know it," said a third.

"It was not done in broad daylight, as you know very well; and we are not expected to prowl around in back yards, looking for possible assassins," the police retorted hotly. "But get out of here, every one of you; we've got to search the premises." And with much taunting and resisting the mob at last withdrew.

Reporters for the several newspapers, the bank officials and a neighbor or two were allowed to remain; the Mayor, a personal friend of the family, came in, and together they awaited in an outer room the announcement of the result of the examination by the physician.

The wound on the head was found to extend from forehead to crown.

"The whole bit of the axe," said one of the doctors; but although it was an ugly gash it did not seem to have penetrated the skull; and aside from that there was not a bruise or wound of any kind on the body.

The man breathed, and it seemed possible that he might recover if he escaped concussion of the brain.

Having done everything possible for his comfort and well-being, attention was turned to a close examination of the place and everybody concerned, in hopes of finding something that would explain the murderous attack on Dr. Dean.

Encouraged by the knowledge that her husband still lived, Mrs. Dean had recovered her composure, and was able to state quite clearly the little she knew of the affair, in compliance with the somewhat pompous request of the chief of police, who felt that his hour had come.

"It was late," she began. "And I came home in a great hurry; it was so dark that I could not see distinctly across the street. I hurried in and lighted the lamps, wondering where Mr. Dean could be. The children I did not expect home until after tea at their auntie's; the girl should have been here, but was not. Mr. Dean, I knew, had some work he was anxious to finish, and it was a surprise to me to find the house dark and no one about."

"Did you see or hear anything at all unusual on the street, or about the house or yard as you came in?" asked the chief of police.

All felt that it was a very serious occasion indeed, and they crowded closer and listened with intense interest, the reporters' pencils flying, as Mrs. Dean answered.

"No, I noticed nothing unusual about the place, except that the lamps had not been lighted."

"Did you meet any one who might have come from here?" he asked.

"I met no one on this street," she answered, and then went on with her story. "After lighting the lamps I went into the kitchen and found the outside door open——"

"Ah, ha!" ejaculated the chief, knowingly. "'Outside door open.' Was it wide open?"

The bank president frowned at the interruption.

"Yes," said Mrs. Dean. "It was wide open; that was strange, and I felt that something was wrong. I called Mr. Dean several times, but got no answer, so I ran out into the back yard and found him stretched out on the ground," she faltered a little at recollection of the dreadful sight, but rallied immediately.

"It was lighter on the west side of the house, and Mr. Dean had on his gray clothes, and so I saw him quite plainly at once. He was lying on his back, the blood had streamed down over his face, and I thought he was dead—and I began to scream—and to try and lift him up. He was so limp and helpless that I grew more frightened at touching him, and I thought I would faint before any one came. It seemed so long that I called and called for help before anybody heard me. Just for an instant I couldn't think what had happened, and then I knew that some one had murdered him, or tried to." And she paused, wiping the tears from her eyes.

"If you had been obliged to search the back premises for Mr. Dean you would very likely have discovered some trace of the assassin, but coming upon him at once in that condition the shock and excitement would, of course, render it impossible for you to observe the surroundings carefully," said the chief. "It is my opinion that the murderer heard you coming and made off down the alley."

"And I am sure he ran up the alley, as he could more quickly get in hiding behind the business houses," said the bank president positively and added: "Very likely he slipped around and came down into the crowd."

The chief sniffed a little as he replied:

"He would have to have a great deal of nerve to do that. Anyhow, it is plain that he was frightened away before he accomplished his object, as the contents of Mr. Dean's pockets were not disturbed."

"His object was to obtain possession of the keys, of course," said the bank president, twirling the bunch in his fingers.

The servant girl, when she was examined, stated, with much incoherence, that she had stepped out to see a friend a couple of blocks away for a few moments; stayed longed than she meant to and was still away when Mr. Dean came in; that as she was hurrying home she saw a man come out of the alley and cross the street and a few seconds after she heard Mrs. Dean's screams.

The chief rubbed his hands and cast a triumphant glance at the bank president, as he said:

"The very man! He ran down the alley and was making for that string of old sheds and stables. I am seldom mistaken in my surmises, and the man whom I sent out to search in that direction will probably bring him in."

The girl's testimony was very important, and she was looked at with interest as one who had seen the murderous villain. Questioned closely, it was found that she could not give a description of him; that he was almost on a run and held his head down; that he made across the street diagonally, and was at least a half block from her, and she could tell nothing as to the color of his hair, eyes or clothing.

The men, presently returning, did not bring him in; had found no trace of him, and nothing had been discovered to give them a clew, though the whole place and the alley behind the store buildings had been very carefully searched.

The bank president grew impatient. It seemed to him the miscreant might have been found at once had it been rightly managed.

"We must have a strong guard at the bank to-night," he remarked to one of the directors as they wended their way thither, the chief accompanying them. "I am satisfied that the fellow who attacked Mr. Dean was only one of a gang who have planned to rob the bank, and they may try it yet, although he failed to get the keys. He ought to have been taken before this."

The chief was nettled and interposed hotly.

"You intimate, sir, that carelessness and incompetency on our part has allowed him to escape. I can assure you that no one could have been more prompt and thorough in the search than we have. The depots are watched and every spot where a fugitive could be lurking has been, or is now being, overhauled."

"Oh, of course, Jenkins," the bank president answered. "You are doing as well as you know how, I suppose; but this is beyond the common town police. I shall telegraph to the city for a good detective at once."

"You can do as you please," snapped the chief, in high dudgeon.

"Certainly," answered the president, blandly.

Such a bold attempt at crime had never before been made in the quiet town, and it was excited beyond measure. The Morning News, being the only morning paper in the place, had a big scoop on its several evening rivals, and made the most of it. Column after column was filled with the stories of different people, narrating all that was known, suspected or imagined, and it sold like hot cakes.

The city detective arrived early and excited much interest and comment, but like the great man that he was he preserved a dignified reserve and silence.

The physician who had cared for Mr. Dean through the night reported him as much better; that he had passed from unconsciousness into natural sleep, and would probably awaken rational and able to give an account of the attempt on his life. The detective requested the privilege of being present (out of sight, of course, as a strange face might excite him) when Mr. Dean rallied enough to be questioned.

The night had passed quietly as far as the bank was concerned. A number of arrests had been made and suspicious characters were reported as having been seen on all sides.

It is surprising how after-events will clear the mental vision. Many remembered distinctly the villainous appearance of men whom they had observed slouching along the streets. The detective had made known nothing of his mind on the case, except to intimate that he should probably telegraph for several men from his force in the city, and his manner only served to strengthen the air of mystery that brooded over the place.

People looked at each other with questioning eyes, as if wondering if some of their own townspeople might not prove to be implicated in the affair. It was supposed by every one that Mr. Dean had seen enough of his assailant to be able to identify him if known, or describe him if a stranger, and business was almost suspended in the anxiety and eagerness all felt when it was whispered about that he had awakened rational.

Only the officers of the law and the bank president were admitted to the room adjoining the one where Mr. Dean lay. After uneasy movements, partially arousing and drifting off to sleep again, he had finally opened his eyes and looked about. Noticing the doctor, he said:

"Why, doctor, you here?"

The doctor merely nodded, watching him closely as he rubbed his eyes again, felt his head and then exclaimed:

"Oh, I remember now! This is to-morrow, is it not?"

"Yes, this is to-morrow," the doctor answered. "How do you feel now?"

"All right," he answered promptly, and then added, smiling, "but that blow was a swinger, wasn't it?"

The listeners, out of sight, craned their necks and strained their ears to catch every word. He seemed to come suddenly to a full understanding, for he said quickly:

"Why, I must have been pretty badly stunned to lie so all night. Were you frightened, Alice?" he asked his wife.

"Oh, yes," she answered, almost in tears; "I thought the wretch had killed you."

"Who?" he asked, then added: "There was no one."

"There, never mind," said the doctor, soothingly. "Drink this and don't get excited."

Though everybody was aching to hear what he had to say about the assassin, they feared the abrupt way in which Mrs. Dean had mentioned him would retard matters.

"Ought to have been led up to very carefully," muttered the detective.

"I am not excited," said Mr. Dean to the doctor. "But I want to know what my wife meant. Is it supposed that somebody attacked me with an axe?"

"Certainly," said the doctor, seeing that the truth would be the best. "And he very nearly killed you, too. Can you tell us who he was or what he was like?"

In their eagerness the listeners edged inside the door. Mr. Dean lay and laughed; then catching sight of the bank president, said:

"Good-morning, Mr. Akers. You here, too?"

"Yes," said the president, "we are anxious to know all you can tell us about it—what he was like, what he said, and if he let out anything about the gang——"

The doctor put up his hand.

"Don't hurry him," he said. "Take your time, Mr. Dean."

Mr. Dean laughed again as he said:

"There was no one here but myself; positively no one."

"But you were struck a murderous blow by some one. Don't you remember?" said the rather impatient president.

"Nobody struck me at all. I did it myself," said Mr. Dean flatly.

There was a sensation.

"He doesn't know what he is saying. He is not rational," said some one.

Mr. Dean looked at the blank faces and put out his hand, saying:

"You will find my pulse quiet, doctor. I have no fever. I know very well what I am saying. I remember how it happened."

"He certainly is all right," said the doctor. "Tell us about it, Dean," he continued.

"I usually split wood a while for exercise after coming home from the bank. There was no one at home, and I left the kitchen door open, meaning to carry in a big armful. I got hold of a particularly tough stick and I was bound to split it. I swung the axe with all my strength, to fetch a tremendous blow, and it caught on the wire clothes line above me, bounded, turned and came down on my head before I could possibly dodge it. You see how easily that could happen. So easy that I wonder you did not discover it for yourselves." And he laughed again.

Yes, they saw now how easily it could happen. They were convinced.

"Well, I'll be blowed!" exclaimed the bank president, slowly, and as they silently dispersed Mr. Dean sent his parting shot after them:

"If I had killed myself I suppose you would have always believed me to have been murdered and would have fastened it upon some poor fellow and punished him for it."—Waverley Magazine.

GARRETS AND BOOKS.

Delights of Which the Modern Child Knows Nothing.

I do not believe that the modern child knows anything about an attic. The fin-de-siecle attic is a respectable place, where boxes are solemnly piled and where moth camphor sheds its fragrance abroad, says a writer in Lippincott's. There are hardly any old books to be found, for most people send them to the Hebrew merchants on the side streets. Our attic was a long, low room, with mysterious dark corners, into whose depths we did not penetrate. There was an old hair trunk in one corner that held some of grandmother's muslin dresses. It was opened only on rare occasions and I was allowed but a glimpse of the faded beauty within. There was an old spinning wheel where spiders hung fantastic wreaths and there was a guitar with broken, moldered strings.

But the corner where the books were piled was the spot I liked the best. An old-fashioned, tiny-paned window let an occasional sunbeam stray across the "Ladies' Repositories" and "Saints' Rest." There was a fine old elm tree that tapped against the window and sometimes a robin sent a thrill of song into the dusty corners. Just beneath the window seat I used to sit, a small crouched form, bending over a musty volume.

But when I wished to read under the most blissful conditions I fortified myself with half a dozen russet apples, whose juice would have given flavor to a treatise on Hebrew grammar. Now, I never see a russet apple without seeing also the dim old attic and an utterly contented child, and I am sure the market women misunderstand my wistful glance, for they draw closer to their baskets and look at me in suspicious fashion. An apple, so some tell us, deprived us of our Eden; but apples were an important feature of my childish paradise. So let us leave them in Pomona's care and look at the intellectual part of the feast.

Their Method.

Edna Lyall's style of hairdressing reminds one of Topsy, inasmuch as it is a frizzy pompadour. Maxwell Gray draws her hair over her ears, almost, but not quite, in the exaggerated fashion of Alice and Phoebe Cary, whose hair hung pouch-fashion around their ears and necks.

The curl was and is in favor with women who write. Elizabeth Barrett Browning's expressive face was framed in a shower of dark curls, which enhanced the look of youthfulness under her dark-fringed eyes. The all-round brown curls of Jane Austen were the admiration of her friends, who regretted her early adoption of the cap which English women still think it decorous to don at middle age.

Amelie Rives (Princess Troubetzhof) is fond of the fluffy bang and the graceful coil low in the neck. Miss Sarah Orne Jewett wears, in place of the bang, a little parted wave.

George Eliot wore her hair simply divided and falling in smooth neck curls. So did Mrs. Anna Jameson.

The bang seemed in part a concession to older and more extravagant styles of hair, and numberless are the women who adopted it and wear it still despite its tendency to die out of fashion's grace. Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett has always worn it low over her high forehead. When younger her hair was simply divided behind it to fall over the tips of her ears and coil low in the neck, but now she has adopted the bang and the French roll. Clara Louise Burnham, too, wears the bang and a figure eight at the back of her head. Mrs. Mary Hartwell Catherwood indulges, too, in this bang. So does Jennie June.

There is a certain dignity about the style known as the English bun. It is especially striking when worn on top, but it is not every face that will stand it. Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge adopts it with grace and effect; also Marion Harland and Mrs. Amelia E. Barr.

Constance Fenimore Woolson wore the bang with her curled low in her neck. So did Miss Anne Reeve Aldrich, the promising young poet who died in 1892. Ella Wheeler Wilcox wears it and also the Grecian, or what is better known as the Psyche knot. It becomes her, as most girlish styles do. Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop makes concession to the bang, and so does Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton. Even Maria Edgeworth had to wear a dark frisette when the gray peeped from under her cap behind.

Carry a Black Cat for Luck.

The workers at Barrow-in-Furness makes it a point of carrying a black cat on every ship that is built there. They consider that this brings luck to the ship.

TRICKS FOR PARLOR SPORTS.

Clever Delusions Once Practiced by Alexander Herrmann.

There are four little tricks which are said to have originated with the late Alexander Herrman, and which for awhile baffled those who saw them performed by him. Indeed, they continue to be baffling, for their secret is sleight of hand as well as knowledge.

The easiest of them is the putting of a bird in its cage by an optical delusion. Take a round piece of pasteboard and on one side of it draw a canary bird. If you cannot draw you can cut a small bird out of a picture and paste it on the card. On the other side of the pasteboard draw a cage.

THE EMPTY CAGE.

When you show this card to the audience show them the side of the card only upon which the cage is drawn, yet do it in such a way that they imagine they have seen both sides of the pasteboard.

Tie a piece of thread through opposite sides of the card and twirl rapidly before the eyes of your audience. The bird and the cage will move so rapidly that the audience will see a bird in its cage where before they saw an empty cage.

THE BIRD IN ITS CAGE.

The simple trick of putting a needle through a nickel can be done without private rehearsal. Take a cork and run a needle through it, leaving the point flush with the cork. Now place a nickel between two blocks of wood, put the cork upon it and give the top a sharp blow with a hammer. When you have pulled the cork off the needle the point of the needle will be found to have penetrated the nickel. This is most successfully accomplished by taking a marked nickel from anyone in the company.

THREADING A NICKEL.

Disappear and return a minute later with the needle driven through the nickel.

The very attractive feat of causing a table to move can be done by means of a thread attached to the trousers leg of the skillful operator. Let the thread be caught also around the leg of the table.

During the evening, as the conversation turns upon peculiar phenomena, the subject of table tipping can be introduced. The wily operaton, sitting by a table, suggests that he can make the table move. All are anxious to see him do it. He begins by rubbing the top smartly with a silk handkerchief to generate the electricity. Then he makes peculiar passes over it, and finally, stepping backward, he commands it to follow him. Needless to say, it obeys him, walking faster or slower, according to his demand. If this is practiced upon a dark floor with a slender black silk thread the deception is perfect.

MAKING THE TABLE MOVE.

The bird cage delusion suggests another often practiced. A young man in the audience tells a story about going to a photographer to get his picture taken. He shows the card, a circular piece of board with his picture upon it. It is mounted a little to one side, but that makes no difference. He now twirls the card by pieces of string, and the delighted audience sees two photographs side by side, one of the young man and the other of a pretty young woman. Of course, the young woman's picture was mounted on the reverse side of the card, but when twirled rapidly they seemed to be side by side.

These little tricks are enough to amuse a parlor full of people, and when you have done your share of the entertainment you can step aside for the next one to take your place.

PARIS.

An Extraordinary Example of Outward Beauty and Inward Filth.

"For a month," says Miss Lilian Bell, writing of Paris—one of her bright letters of travel—in the Ladies' Home Journal, "I have been in this city of limited republicanism; this extraordinary example of outward beauty and inward uncleanness; this bewildering cosmopolis of cheap luxuries and expensive necessities; this curious city of contradictions, where you might eat your breakfast from the streets—they are so clean—but where you must close your eyes to the spectacles of the curbstones; this beautiful, whited sepulchre, where exists the unwritten law, 'Commit any offense you will, provided you submerge it in poetry and flowers;' this exponent of outward observances, where a gentleman will deliberately push you into the street if he wishes to pass you in a crowd, but where his action is condoned by his inexpressible manner of raising his hat to you, and the heartfelt sincerity of his apology; where one man will run a mile to restore a lost franc, but if you ask him to change a gold piece he will steal five; where your eyes are ravished with the beauty, and the greenness, and the smoothness and apparent ease of living of all its inhabitants; where your mind is filled with the pictures, the music, the art, the general atmosphere of culture and wit; where the cooking is so good but so elusive, and where the shops are so bewitching that you have spent your last dollar without thinking, and you are obliged to cable for a new letter of credit from home before you know it—this is Paris."

Absolute Truth.

The eldest son of a certain family is devoted to a worthy young woman who has a tendency to be exceedingly stout. The suitor's younger brothers, with a deplorable lack of delicacy, chaff him upon his affection and the absurdity of his appearing in public with a lady of twice his size. But their mother, a woman of wit and humor, not only takes his part, but does it with weapons so sharp that sometimes it is hard to tell which way they cut. One day the young man announced his intention of going to a lecture that evening.

"Who's going with you?" called the most unbearable of the boys.

"There, my dear," said the mother, "don't ask questions. It's very ill-bred."

"But I want to know! I want to know awfully. Say, Harold, who is it? One, or more than one?"

"Don't notice him, Harold," said the mother, with dignity in her voice, but with merriment in her eye. "I'll answer for you. Harold is going with a large party."

A Heavy Animal.

According to Nilsson, the zoologist, the weight of the Greenland whale is 100 tons, or 224,000 pounds—equal to that of eighty-eight elephants or 440 bears.

The man with a shady character ought to be able to keep cool.

A UNIQUE DISTINCTION.

Daughter of a Revolutionary Hero and Widow of a Veteran of 1812.

Mary Forbes Cobb, of New London, Ind., enjoys the distinction of being the daughter of a revolutionary soldier and the widow of a veteran of the war of 1812. She was born in Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 11, 1803. Her father was an officer in the revolutionary war, serving five years with distinction and being several times wounded in battle.

Mrs. Cobb's father was Capt. Daniel Gano, whose father and four brothers also served their country faithfully and well at that critical period. The senior member of this fighting family, John Gano, was chaplain of Washington's favorite company of archers.

Mrs. Cobb's first husband, Louis H. Bryan, the great-grandfather of William Jennings Bryan, whom she married in 1820 in Clark County, Ky., was a widower, a veteran of the war of 1812. The elder Bryan was a private soldier in a company of Kentucky militia mustered by Capt. Isaac Cunningham. Louis H. Bryan died in 1834, and a few years later the widow was married to Elisha Cobb, who died in 1844. Mrs. Cobb's last widowhood has extended over a period of fifty-four years.

Mrs. Cobb has lived in the times of all the Presidents since Washington.

MARY FORBES COBB.

Her Kentucky home was near the Henry Clay homestead, and she was well acquainted with the great commoner. She distinctly remembers the visits of De Kalb and Lafayette to America. She is the mother of eleven children, five by her first marriage and six by her second.

Nature's Balloons.

The island of fire, known by the natives as "The Home of the Hot Devils," is a recent discovery in Java. In the center of a huge lake of boiling mud and slime exists a phenomenon absolutely unique, and so wonderful that tourists brave the difficulties of the long journey inland simply to see it. Scores of enormous bubbles are formed in the sticky slime by the gases which arise from the lower depths, and these grow and increase to an enormous size, looking like nothing so much as the large model balloons sent up sometimes to ascertain the direction of the wind. These bubbles, some of them, attain a diameter of five or six feet before they burst, which they do with a loud explosion. The sounds are described as resembling a constant series of heavy platoon firing.

Uses Only English.

The king of Greece, when conversing with the members of his family, never employs any but the English language. He seldom speaks French, and only uses Greek when compelled to do so.

Probably the first thought that comes to a woman in a railroad accident is how silly it was of her to put on her old petticoat that morning.

GASOLINE SLEIGH FOR THE CHILKOOT PASS.

A resident of Salem, Ore., has invented a traction sleigh which is intended for use on the Chilkoot pass, between Dyea and the lakes. It carries a gasoline engine, mounted on a framework of wrought steel runners curved at both ends. The engine works a drum, around which is coiled 300 feet of ⅜-inch steel cable. The cable, which weighs 200 pounds, is carried ahead as it unwinds, and is made fast to a rock, tree or any other natural projection. The winding of the cable around the drum by the gasoline engine draws the sled, with a train of freight-laden sleds attached to it, to the point ahead. The sled is expected to average four miles a day. It consumes six gallons of gasoline a day and ten gallons of water. The sled is to be shipped from San Francisco, where it was made, to Seattle by steamer.

NOTICE NO. 320.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, Independence, California. January 28, 1898.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT Hugh J. Cannon, whose postoffice address is Salt Lake City, Salt Lake county, State of Utah, has made application for a patent for twenty-nine hundred and fifty linear feet of the Confidence and Mendocino Lode bearing gold, situate in no organized mining district, Inyo county, State of California, and described in the official plats and field notes on file in this office as follows, viz:

Said Confidence mining claims described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at a pine post three (3) feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "L. L. S. M." (identical with old lode line monument at southerly end of lode) whence main working shaft bears N. 77 deg. 15 min. E. 0.45 chains and U.S.L.M. No. 72 bears S 77 deg 47 min E 4.54 chains distant.

Thence the variation of the magnetic needle being 15 deg 15min E along line of lode N 25 deg 15 min E 1.20 chains intersection of ravines 2.42 chains mouth of small tunnel 20 links to east 5.30 chains ravine course E and W and end of big outcrop 7.12 chains shaft No 2, 30 links to right, 16 links deep on vein 7.40 chains hole 10 links to right 8.37 chains ravine course N E and S W 17.92 chains ravine course N E and S W 21.97 chains 1450 feet to pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "L. L. N M." (identical with original load line monument at northerly end of lode.)

SURVEY OF EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES

Beginning at corner No. 1. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed U.S.S. 67, No. 1, identical with corner number 1 of Mendocino location of this survey. Whence U. S. location monument No. 72 bears N 20 deg. 50 min. E 1 1-10 feet. Said location monument is a granite stone 30 inches long, 20 inches wide, 6 inches thick, marked "U.S.L.M. No. 72," set 15 inches in ground with brass plate set in top, with conical mound of stone, 6 feet square and 4 feet high beside it. From said U. S. L. M. No. 72, mouth of Confidence tunnel bears N 53 deg 15 min W 3.94 chains The top of main working shaft bears N 74 deg 15 min W 4.14 chains. And a hill just north of the bend where the road to the mine from Death Valley turns eastward (the only hill there that has large detached blocks of granite covering its east side) bears N 74 deg 37 min W about 3 miles 60 chains.

Thence the variation being 15 deg 15 min. east.

Course No. 1, N 77 deg. 34 min. W 1.06 chains cross small ravine, course N W and S E 4.545 chains 300 feet to south lode line monument of this location, whence shaft No 1 bears N 36 deg 15 min E 3.48 chains shaft No. 3 bears N 19 deg. 30 min. E 12.12 chains 9.00 chains 600 feet to corner No. 2 identical with corner No. 5 Mendocino location of this survey.

A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone, scribed "U.S.S. 67 No 2," whence intersection of ravines bears N 75 deg 30 min E 2.12 chains thence deflecting 102 deg 49 min to right and along westerly boundary of this claim.

Course No 2, N 25 deg 15 min E 0.61 chains road in ravine 1.67 chains road to cabin 2.27 chains to the S W corner of cabin 30 feet by 60 feet 9.09 chains to ravine 21.97 chains 1450 feet to corner No. 3, a pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground in stone mound scribed "U.S.S. 67, No 3" whence location corner of this location bears north 66 deg 30 min west, 1 50-100 chains on north side of ravine. Thence deflecting 77 deg 11 min to right. Course No. 3, S 77 deg 34 min E 4.454 chains, 294 feet to north lode true monument of this location, previously described. Whence ravine bears N 25 deg 15 min E 1 67-100 chains, course E and W 7.39 chains 487 8-100 feet, to corner No 4 location corner of this location. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with stone mound scribed "U.S.S. 67, No. 4," whence ravine bears N 20 deg 50 min E 2 50-100. Thence deflecting 98 deg 24 min to the right. Course No. 4, S 20 deg 50 min W 7.50 chains ravine 10.50 chains. Branch of ravine 15.00 chains ravine 18.00 chains ravine 21.22 chains ravine 21.65 chains 1429 feet to corner No. 1, the place of beginning. Containing seventeen and 64-100 acres.

Said Mendocino mining claim is described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at a pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground, with mound of stone scribed "L.L.N.M" (identical with old line monument) at northerly end of lode whence main working shaft bears N 77 deg 15 min E 0.45 chains and U.S.L.M. No 72 bears S 77 deg 47 min E 4.545 chains. Thence the variation of the magnetic needle being 15 deg 15 min E along line of lode S 34 deg 45 min W 0.50 chains small ravine course N W 1.80 chains small cut in outcrop of vein course E and W 2.20 chains shaft 60 feet deep, in vein, bears west 10 feet, 2.94 chains. Notice monument of Mendocino location 5.00 chains end of outcrop and north edge of gulch No. 1 course E and W 8.00 chains. South edge of gulch 21.70 chains north edge of gulch course E and W, 22.72 chains 1500 feet to pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 12 inches in ground in stone mound scribed "L.L.S.M." whence old lode line monument of this Mendocino location bears S 34 deg 45 min W 38 links distant.

SURVEY OF EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES.

Beginning at corner No. 1, identical with corner No. 1 of Confidence location of this survey. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone, scribed "U.S.S. 67 No. 1."

Thence the variation being 15 deg 15 min east.

Course No. 1, S 34 deg 45 min W 0.85 chains ravine course N W and S E 5.75 chains north side of gulch, course E and W 7.88 chains. South side of gulch, course E and W 21.21 chains. North side of gulch course E and W 22.73 chains 1500 feet to corner No. 2. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "U.S.S. 67 No. 2," whence corner of the location bears S 34 deg 45 min W 1.51 chains south side of gulch No. 2 bears 34 deg 45 min W 1.67 chains thence deflecting 67 deg 41 min to the right.

Course No. 2, N 77 deg 34 min W 4.545 chains 300 feet south lode line monument 5.85 chains 386.10 feet corner No. 3. A pine post 3 feet long, set 18 inches in ground, with mound of stone, scribed "U. S. S. 67, No. 3," on a ridge in center of gulch, no bearings available. Thence deflecting 19 deg 19 min right.

Course No. 3, N 58 deg 15 min W 3.35 chains 221 feet to corner No, 4 original location corner of the claim.

A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "U. S. S. 67, No. 4." Thence deflecting 93 deg 54 min to the right.

Course No. 4, N 35 deg 39 min E 0.45 chains. North side of gulch 13.35 chains; south side of gulch 15.61 chains; north side of gulch No. 1, 21.67 chains; 1430.4 feet; to corner No. 5 identical with corner No. 2 of Confidence location, this survey. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "U. S. S. 67, No. 2." Thence deflecting 66 deg 47 min. to the right.

Course No. 5, S 77 deg 34 min E 4.545 chains to north lode line monument previously described 9.09 chains, 600 feet; to corner No. 1, the place of beginning. Containing nineteen and 32-100 acres.

Said two claims being contiguous and constituting the Confidence and Mendocino Consolidated Quartz Mines, and being on unsurveyed public land of the United States, in Township 20, north of Range 5 east, San Bernardino meridian, and the nearest settlement is Ballarat, about 40 miles to the Westward.

The location of said Confidence mine is recorded in the County Recorder's office of Inyo county, State of California, on page 441 of Book H of L. W. and M. claims. And the location of said Mendocino Mine is recorded in said Recorder's office on page 438, Book H of L. W. and M. claims.

Adjoining claimants are as follows: Said Confidence mine is bounded on the north by the Florence unsurveyed claim and on the south by said Mendocino claim, and said Mendocino claim is bounded on the north by said Confidence claim and on the south by the I X L claim, unsurveyed, and there are no claims located on the east or west of said claims.

All persons holding adverse claims thereto are required to present the same before this office within sixty days from the first day of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the statute.

Action brought in the Superior court of the county of Inyo, State of California, and the complaint filed in the said county of Inyo, in the office of the clerk of said Superior court.
The People of the State of California send greeting to Abby C. Wesson, defendant.
You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiffs in the Superior court of the county of Inyo, State of California and to answer the complaint filed therin, within ten days, exclusive of the day of service, after the service on you of this summons, if served within this county, or if served elsewhere, within thirty days.
The said action is brought to obtain judgment foreclosing all your right, title and interest in and to all the following described State school lands of the State of California, situate lying and being in the county of Inyo, State of California, to wit: Sec. 16, Township No. 24 south, Range No. 40 east, MDM. And cancelling, annulling and henceforth rendering null and void, the certificate of purchase thereto, No. 11,867, from the State of California, for non-payment of interest amounting to $179.20, due and unpaid to the said State of California, on the first day of January, 1896, upon said State school lands and the certificate of purchase thereof aforesaid, then and now unpaid and delinquent, for two dollars cost of publication, ten dollars attorney fee and for costs of suit, and for such other and further relief in the premises as the case may require, and as to the court may seem just and equitable, as will more fully appear by reference to the complaint on file herein.
And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, said plaintiff will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint.
Witness my hand and the seal of said Superior court of the said county of Inyo, State of California, this 31st day of December, A. D. 1896. D. J. HESSION, Seal Clerk.

KLONDIKE.

The cold is as bitter in many sections of our Western country as any freezing corner of Klondike. Twenty degrees below zero is not an uncommon condition of winter weather, and by reason of this intense cold, rheumatism has its best chance to grow painfully intense and chronic in its continuance. We need not, therefore, borrow an idea of cold from Klondike. What we want is the best cure for rheumatism, and anywhere and everywhere, whether in freezing cold or melting heat, St. Jacobs Oil is known, valued and used as the Master Cure of this universal plague of mankind. The proof of its efficacy can always be produced, and its efficacy in the cure of the disease goes on in all conditions of weather.

"I'm feeling sew-sew," said the thread to the needle; "how are you feeling?" "Oh, I'm broke," snapped the needle. And the sewing-machine mistress had no further use for him.

THE GOVERNMENT'S DOMAIN.

The commissioner of the general land office has submitted his report to the Secretary of the Interior. Compared with last year, it shows a decrease of 3,298 homestead entries, aggregating 378,625 acres. Quite proportionate to this is the falling off in general health when no effort is made to reform irregularity of the bowels. This can easily be accomplished with the aid of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, also a remedy for malaria, dyspepsia, rheumatism and liver trouble.

"What is your favorite poem?" inquired the newspaper reporter. And, after hard thought, the Spanish general answered: "If at First You Don't Succeed, Try, Try, Again."

AN OPEN LETTER TO MOTHERS.

We are asserting in the courts our right to the exclusive use of the word "CASTORIA," and "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," as our Trade Mark.

I, Dr. Samuel Pitcher, of Hyannis, Massachusetts, was the originator of "PITCHER'S CASTORIA," the same that has borne and does now bear the fac simile signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on every wrapper. This is the original "PITCHER'S CASTORIA" which has been used in the homes of the mothers of America for over thirty years. Look Carefully at the wrapper and see that it is the kind you have always bought, and has the signature of CHAS. H. FLETCHER on the wrapper. No one has authority from me to use my name except The Centaur Company of which Chas. H. Fletcher is President.

The new separate colored schools at Alton, Ill., are all but deserted. In one, the Lovejoy School, there was only a single pupil for the Lincoln birthday exercises. The complete teaching force has, however, been steadily maintained, and the costs are as much as if the schools were crowded. In the mandamus case the attorneys for the city have forwarded notice of intention to file an amended answer, and this will be resented in court.

An Adventure in Valparaiso.

'Twas a bright morning in the summer of '60, said Capt. Handy, that Jack Bolles and I, a couple of boys, not yet 20 years old, were discharged in Valparaiso from the whaling bark Golconda, of New Bedford, with a hundred and ten dollars apiece in gold "condors" in our pockets. All the romance of whaling in the South Seas and its attendant dangers which had filled our imaginations when we shipped as green hands at the "Pooh lay," had been effectually dissipated by the greasy realities of "blanket and hawse pieces," cutting up in the "blubber room," "down scraps" and "trying out," supplemented by a ten hours' pull in the boats every other day, poor food, and rough, if not brutal, treatment, from the officers.

So, as we stood that morning on the jetty, clinking the money in our pockets and watching our old ship disappear in the offing, we felt, indeed, "monarchs of all we surveyed."

At last she was hull down, and turning away with sighs of relief, we clattered once more up the ill-paved street to the Consul's office, where we had been paid off, and inquired of him when we could take passage for home. We learned, much to our disappointment, that there were no ships in port bound for the States, nor would there be any, except an occasional whaler, for six months to come.

"We must resign ourselves to the inevitable," said Jack, "and the next question is, Where are we going to stop?"

The Consul assured us that an American named Henderson kept the only decent place in town, outside of the rough sailor boarding houses, and recommended us to go there. We found Henderson a good fellow, who gave us a large room with two beds in it, and after seeing our chests safely stowed away, we strolled out to look at the town, and incidentally to get work.

After walking about the city for an hour or two, we descended to the first or commercial street to look for work. Being young, persistent and fairly well educated, we were lucky enough to find employment with two English firms, branch houses of London and Liverpool traders. Next morning we went to work, and for a couple of months our lives moved on, tranquilly enough. In the evenings after supper we smoked our cigarittos, and managed, with the aid of an old grammar, to learn a little Spanish. Occasionally, on moonlight nights, we walked out through the town, but we never went far, as Henderson warned us that it was no uncommon thing for a stranger to be found in the outlying parts of the city with his pockets rifled and a dagger wound in his breast.

One evening my superintendent discovered that a mistake had been made in the outward manifest of the ship Lord Palmerston, and noting that she was lying "off and on," with her anchor atrip, ordered me to board her as soon as possible before she squared away for old England, and rectify the error. So, without delay, I hurried to the jetty, embarked, and in a half hour climbed up the side of the Palmerston.

My business detained me longer than I had anticipated, and it was fully 9 o'clock before I stepped to the side. As the tide was on the ebb, my boatman had to land me at the nearest point, and I figured that I had about four miles to walk home.

It was moonlight, but here and there the dark shadows seemed to invite the assassin, and as I hurried on, I cast many an anxious glance behind me. I had reached the outskirts of the city and was congratulating myself, when suddenly, from under an overhanging "balcon," a woman darted forth and clutched my arm, crying out in piteous accents:

"Por el amor de Dios! Senor Americano! Por el amor de Dios!" (For the love of God, Senor American!)

"Que quiere conmigo, Senorita?" (What do you want with me, lady?) I replied, as I stepped under the solitary lamp on the corner and looked at her more closely. She was dressed in somber black and the mantilla she wore was so drawn over her face that but one eye was visible; that single orb, however, shone with singular limpidity and beauty.

She was evidently greatly excited, and as she went on in her voluble Spanish, I gathered from the little I knew of the language that her father was lying at the point of death in a house near by and she wanted me to go with her to his assistance. Why she wanted me to accompany her, I could not understand; therefore I asked her why she did not appeal to her own people.

She replied that she and her father were strangers, who had but recently come from Santiago, and that there were so many "ladrones," or robbers, among her own people that she dared not trust them, and in a still more urgent tone, begged me to go with her.

Truly, "he who hesitates is lost," for as I thought of Henderson's warning, the lateness of the hour, and the woman's singular persistence, and faltered, undecided, she dropped her mantilla, and in an instant every scruple had vanished. The light from the moon illumined a face perfect in its classic beauty, and as innocent as that of the Madonna, and as I saw the girl's tear-stained cheeks (she was only about 16) and looked into her beautiful, imploring eyes, I threw caution to the winds.

"WITH INCREDIBLE STRENGTH SHE STROVE TO DRAG ME FORWARD."

sailor-like, and motioned her to lead and I would follow.

A look of joy overspread her face, and she fervently murmured her thanks as she guided me up the dark and narrow street. Here and there some building was fantastically silhouetted by the moon, and among its grim shadows I fancied I could see a dark form moving, but at the low, sweet sound of my fair guide's "Por aca, senor" (This way, sir), all my suspicions would vanish, and I felt heartily ashamed of myself and hurried forward in her wake. Graceful as a fawn, she bounded lightly up the steps which led to the street above, revealing as she did so a beautiful foot and ankle, and I, agile though I was, could hardly keep up with her.

Panting with exertion, at last we reached the top of the plateau, which overlooked the town, and my guide gracefully waved her hand toward a light, like a star in the distance, and murmured:

"Ahi esta la casa" (Yonder is the house).

At that moment the moon sank behind a mass of black clouds and everything became dark about us; but my guide, pressing her little palm into mine, advanced steadily toward the light. Everything was as still as the dead and a damp and chilly mist penetrated my very marrow.

As the moon shone out in radiant beauty, my blood for a moment seemed to freeze in my veins, for there, before me, gleaming brightly in the moonlight, and winding like a serpent among the doddering crosses and mouldering graves of the Pantheon, was the path that led to our destination.

The low-lying wall of the Pantheon lay directly in front of me, and my guide quickly tripped up the steps which led over it, beckoning for me to follow. Though loath to go further, yet the wondrous beauty of the girl held me as in a spell, and step by step I advanced until I stood upon the top of the wall.

As I looked downward I though I saw the gleam of steel beneath the steps, and the shadow of a man's form crouching there.

I halted and called out to the girl:

"Espera!" (Wait!)

At that moment the moon was again obscured and in the semi-darkness (for there was no street lamp there, and now all my senses were on the alert) I felt, rather than saw, her form as she mounted the steps, and reaching forward, took my hand, saying, "Porque?" (Why?)

"Porque no me voy!" (Because I shall not go!) I answered, sternly.

As I spoke, her fingers clutched mine and with incredible strength she strove to drag me forward, but, ignoring her efforts, I cast a final look downward, and this time I saw distinctly (for the cloud had passed from the moon) a man coming swiftly and silently toward the foot of the steps.

With one glance at the girl, whose face was now transformed by fury into that of a demon, I hurled her aside, rushed down the steps, every nerve strung to its highest tension, and ran at my utmost speed toward the city.

I heard a man's hoarse shout behind me, and had reached the steps which led down into the city, in safety, when suddenly I caught my foot, stumbled, and half fell to the ground. Just as I fell forward something grazed my cheek, searing it like a redhot iron, and fell, with a ringing sound, on the steps far below me.

Terror now lent additional wings to my speed, and I never paused until I felt exhausted through the portals of Henderson's home. Managing to crawl up the steps I staggered into the dining-roow, where Jack and Henderson sat, anxiously awaiting me, and sank breathless into a chair.

Their looks of astonishment were succeeded by those of horror as Jack exclaimed:

"My God, Henderson! Look at the blood!"

Putting my hand up to my face I withdrew it wet with blood, and Henderson, who busied himself in washing it away, disclosed a cut two inches long where the knife had just touched me.

Explanations followed and as I ate the meal waiting for me, I told the strange adventure to my willing listeners. As I finished, Henderson, who had listened quietly, as was his wont, burst out excitedly:

"This explains it all, boys. It's no longer a mystery!"

Pressing him for his reasons, he went on to say that for the last two years foreigners had frequently been found, stabbed, in outlying and solitary parts of the city. The victims were invariably well dressed, but as no money or papers were ever found upon them, investigation had been of no avail.

"But here's a clew which can be followed up," said Henderson, "and tomorrow morning we'll consult the chief of police."

Bright and early next morning (for we got but little sleep that night) we repaired to the chief of police, and to him I told my tale, Henderson acting as interpreter.

The chief was very much surprised and pleased by my information, and after cautioning us to keep silent, dismissed us by saying "we'd hear from him in a few days."

Two days later the foreign element of the city was thrilled by another atrocious murder. This time it was a rich young Englishman, named Burton, who had come down from Lima to visit some friends, and who, after spending the evening with them, left about 11 o'clock for his hotel, which was only two blocks away. Next morning his body, robbed of all his valuables and papers, was found, floating in the bay, with a gaping dagger wound in the back.

Burton's friends, who were rich and influential, backed by the British Consul, made a vigorous attack upon the supine methods of the police, and at last aroused the authorities to something like activity. Following up the clew received from me, the "Jefe" took a personal interest in the matter, and, within a few days, succeeded in capturing the gang, which consisted of five persons—the girl, who was used as a decoy—and four men. It was estimated that more than two score foreigners had been murdered by this gang during the eighteen months of their sinister operations. At the trial Burton's wallet and passport, found in the robbers' rendezvous, convicted the men, and my identification of the girl completed the case. The men were sentenced, and, according to the methods of that country, were shot three days after the trial. The girl, owing to her youth and beauty, was sent to finish her days in the penal colony at San Carlos.

The years have rolled away since then—years of danger and adventure. Many a time during the war of the rebellion have I looked death in the face, and yet my blood thrills when I think of that night's adventure in Chili."—Philadelphia Times.

Way He Was Welcome.

"Here, Harry, is a dime for you," said Mr. Harper to the little brother of the one he loves. "Have you ever heard Miss Bessie say anything about me when I wasn't here?"

"Oh, lots of times," replied the sweet child.

"And what does she say, Harry?"

"She says she's always glad to have you come here when she's feelin' all wore and tired."

"And," continued the delighted young man, "does she ever explain why she likes to have me come at such times?"

"Yes. She says you're so easy she can go to sleep and still keep you guessin'."—Cleveland Leader.

A Missouri justice of the peace at the close of a case announced with great dignity: "I will hold this case under advisement until next Monday morning, at which time I will render judgment for the plaintiff."

It is said of an Illinois judge who as an attorney had been somewhat noted as an objector that during his term on the bench when an improper question was asked by a lawyer exclaimed, "I object." As the hilarity in the court room subsided he said with great dignity, "That objection is sustained." No one took exception.

Enthusiasm and emotion in an official document appear for once at least in an ancient report by a Mexican officer who had been commissioned to place a grantee in possession of land. He says: "I took him by the hand and led him over the whole tract, he shouting and plucking up grass and throwing stones in the name of the king, saying, 'Long live our beloved monarch, Don Fernando VII., whom God may preserve,' with hurrahs and shouts, and I shed tears of delight at his acclamations."

Unique Celebration.

A highly-esteemed midwife at Stolfe, in Germany, celebrated lately a singular feast. She had just assisted at the birth of her 6,000th child to whom she had given services, and, in honor of that event, she invited all the children whom she had helped to come into the world to her country house to partake of a banquet. Very many big and little children accepted the invitation, passing a pleasant afternoon. When they left in the evening they made a torchlight procession past their benefactor's house, and then took the train to Berlin.—Lloyd's London Weekly.

A Peculiar Bridge.

French engineers are constructing a peculiar bridge over the Seine at Rouen. On each bank of the river miniature Eiffel towers 175 feet high have been erected. From these heavy steel cables will support a track bed, which is to be suspended 160 feet above the surface of the water. Moving platforms on wheels are to be run backwards and forwards over this track bed on rails, and from them will hang huge chains, to which will be attached monster swinging carriages.

Interesting Figures.

The State Board of Agriculture, in their recently issued annual report, deals at some length with the fruit industry of the State and its profit to the grower. The total value of the orchard products of the State for 1897 is estimated at $21,289,545. This total is divided as follows: Citrus fruits, $3,850,000; prunes, $2,900,000; dried fruits other than prunes, $2,600,000; raisins, $2,275,000; deciduous fruits, $2,000,000; nuts, $600,000; canned fruits, $7,054,545. This is a good showing, but unfortunately the value of the crop is misleading when considered as an index of the profit to the grower. On this point the report says:

"Comparing the values of California's productions for the past season, it will be observed that the orchard products of this State are second only to wheat. With these values, in some instances much lower than usual, we show a valuable orchard yield, and it is to be regretted that the grower should receive (excepting for citrus fruits) the smaller portion of the returns, the great bulk of these values going to make good the enormous expense of marketing the product. In the shipments of deciduous fruits under present methods, it is safe to say that refrigeration, transportation and charges of commission men will average from 75 to 90 per cent of the entire sales, to say nothing of material and labor in preparing shipments. At present prices for cured fruits, the amount returned from sales thereof, pays but little over cost of picking and packing, leaving no returns for investment and time of grower."

Watson Denny, a wealthy farmer who lately removed to St. Joseph, Mo., with his family from Ringold county, Ia., shot his wife in the head and then fired a bullet through his own heart. Denny is dead and his wife is dying. The cause is that Denny attempted to transfer a lot of his real estate in Iowa without his wife's knowledge, forging her name to instruments. She discovered the trick, and when she threatened to sue for a divorce Denny undertook to kill her and himself.

WOMAN TO WOMAN.

Women are being taught by bitter experience that many physicians cannot successfully handle their peculiar ailments known as female diseases.

When the woman of to-day experiences such symptoms as backache, nervousness, lassitude, whites, irregular or painful menstruation, pains in groins, bearing-down sensation, palpitation, "all gone" feeling and blues, she at once takes Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, feeling sure of obtaining immediate relief.

Should her symptoms be new to her, she writes to a woman, Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., who promptly explains her case, and tells her free how to get well.

Indeed, so many women are now appealing to Mrs. Pinkham for advice, that a score of lady secretaries are kept constantly at work answering the great volume of correspondence which comes in every day.

SAN FRANCISCO'S SHAME

It is getting rather monotonous to read of the shipwrecks occurring between San Francisco and Alaska, with consequent loss of life. Any old tub, so it looks like a boat, answers the purpose of the ghoulish transportation agents. The wreck of the Helen W. Almy last week, in which twenty-seven lives were lost, was no less than deliberate murder, but under our laws, those responsible will go scott free, and will doubtless soon find another old hulk to send to the bottom loaded with passengers. The owners express their sorrow for the disaster, but their sorrow is a poor consolation to the wives and children who were deprived of husbands and fathers in order that the owners of the bark might gain a few paltry dollars.

To add insult to injury, a San Francisco paper, in commenting editorially on the affair, says that those who lost their lives were in a large measure to blame, as they should have ascertained the condition of the vessel before embarking. It would be just as reasonable to contend that a man killed in a train wreck was a victim of his own carelessness for not taking a monkey-wrench and a hammer and making an examination of the running gear before boarding the train. The majority of the gold hunters who were on the ill-fated boat were from Oklahoma, and as that territory is far removed from navigable bodies of water, the chances are that they did know a binnacle from bilge-water, and therefore were not competent to determine the sea-worthiness of the craft.

San Francisco has spent thousands of dollars to advertise to the world that it is the proper point to outfit for Klondike, and has made special efforts to get the trade from Seattle. It would seem now that the Alaska Trade Committee should take steps to ascertain the condition of vessels on which their customers may take passage in the future, as the average miner does not care to furnish food for sharks, and unless he is insured a reasonably safe means of transportation is very apt to buy his dessicated onion and coffee extract at some other port.

Senator Stewart has introduced the following resolution in Congress, which is the initiatory step towards abolishing the unjust system of letting star mail routes to non-resident contractors:

Resolved. That the Postmaster-General be directed to inform the Senate what was the aggregate amount of money expended during the calendar year for carrying the mails by the use of horse or other animals over what are commonly known as star routes; how much of the money so much of the money so expended was paid to the sub-contractor. Also whether any original contractors obtained more than one contract which he subcontracted. If so give the name and number of contracts which each person received and sublet, and the amount that he received from the department over and above what was paid to the sub-contractor.

Randsburg Notes.

Correspondence Los Angeles Review:

The Independence mine and the Boston mine have changed owners. Both were cash propositions.

The Wedge Mining Company have just had a mill-run of seventy-five tons of ore at the Johannesburg reduction works. The cleanup resulted in four gold bricks worth $2500 each.

The Merced in the Stringer district is having forty-four tons worked at the Eureka mill in Randsburg. This ore will run about $70 to the ton.

The Magganetta mine has had a small run at the Randsburg mill, which went $130 to the ton. Other ore equally rich is being taken out.

From the Napoleon, owned by Pridham, Munson and Lacy, twenty-five tons have just been hauled to the Eureka mill. This ore is very rich, and will not run less than $100 per ton and may go much better.

The Rand Company is running a tunnel into the mountain to strike the Trilby vein at a depth of several hundred feet below the surface, in a distance of 150 feet seven distinct ledges have been crossed, all prospecting well, and one which is fifteen feet in width, and assays $92 per ton.

A great deal of ore is being taken out on all sides, and the future of the camp is looking good. The Rand people are ready to put up a fifty-stamp mill if proper arrangements can be made for water

Machinery in Modern Farming.

The smallest implement upon a big wheat farm is a plow. And from the plow to the elevator—from the first operation in wheat farming to the last—one is forced to realize how the spirit of the age has made itself felt here and has reduced the amount of human labor to the minimum. The man who plows uses his muscle only incidentally in guiding the machine. The man who operates the harrow has a half dozen levers to lighten his labor. The sower who goes forth to sow, walks leisurely behind a drill and works brakes. The reaper needs a quick brain and a quick hand, but not necessarily a strong arm nor a powerful back. He works sitting down. The threshers are merely assistants to a machine, and the men who heave the wheat into the bins only press buttons. The most desirable farm hand is not the fellow who can pound the mauling machine the most lustily at the county fair. He is the man with the cunning brain who can get the most work out of machinery without breaking it. The farm laborer in the west today, where machinery is employed, finds himself advanced to the ranks of skilled labor and enjoys a position not widely different from that of the mill hand in the east. Each is a tender to a machine.

The man who rides a bicycle on a 100-mile trip is simply a "wheelman;" he who rides 500 miles becomes a "tourist;" but the individual who makes the trip a-wheel across the continent almost invariably reaches his destination a full-fledged "newspaper man."—Ex.

News comes from England that Gladstone is failing rapidly, and that the end is not far off.

T. V. Cator has at last done something that goes far to redeem his none too savory past. For years Cator has posed as the apostle of reform, and has been the choice of our Populistic brethren for United States Senator from California. After years of rainbow chasing, Cator this week accomplished a feat that should justly earn him the thanks of every honest voter in the State, irrespective of party affiliations, viz., having the Stratton primary election law declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. This measure was, without question a vicious one, and its enforcement would have resulted in the practical disenfranchisement of a large number of voters. Mr. Cator made an able argument in behalf of his views, and is entitled to a full measure of credit for his efforts. In fact, it is a practical illustration of a blatant reformer really reforming something.

Many arguments have been advanced in favor of the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, but it is doubtful whether a more forcible one has been presented than was contained in a short paragraph published a few days ago in connection with the departure of the United States battleship Oregon from San Francisco for Key West. The paragraph stated that the Oregon would have to replenish her coal at Callao, Peru, en route around Cape Horn, and then proceeds to point out that even if a good rate of speed is maintained all the way, it will take forty days longer to reach Key West than if a Nicaragua Canal existed through which it could pass. Now, and herein lies the strength of the argument, the cost per day of the vessel while steaming is about $1000, so that the extra expense involved in being obliged to go around Cape Horn will be $40,000—and that for one trip of one vessel only.—Reviews.

A decision of considerrble interest to mining men was lately rendered by the United States Circuit Court, District of Nevada. The case at trial was that of the Justice Mining Company vs. Barcla and the point involved was whether a a claim was or was not lost to a locator by disappearance of the stakes The decision of the court was to the effect that the fact that the stakes and monument, as designated in a notice locating a mining claim, were not visible at the time of a subsequent relocation does not vitiate the former location if the law in all other essential requirements has been complied with.

Trout season opens today.

WAR NEWS.

The latest telegraphic advices on the war proposition is that the flying squadron of the United States has been sent to intercept the Spanish torpedo flotilla and to destroy it if it proceeds beyond Porto Rico. That the United States has sent an ultimatum to Spain that Cuban independence must be recognized and the war terminated within forty-eight hours. That Spain has replied to the United States refusing to accept the ultimatum. The case stands here and hostilities may be expected at any moment.

ANOTHER GREENLAND.

Explorer Borchgrevink's Find. Belief in an Antarctic Coal Belt.

In The Strand Magazine C. E. Borchgrevink reviews briefly the results of his visit to South Victoria Land in 1895. He says:

"In my opinion the great southern continent is the Greenland of the south, with just as many possibilities. I do fully believe that little or no known animal life will be found in South Victoria Land. Captain Larsen on the whaler Jason brought back petrified wood from Graham Land, south of Cape Horn, which fact, of course, proves great climatic changes in those regions during succeeding periods. As our knowledge of the great southern continent now stands, we must believe it really to be a continent, and not a mere accumulation of islands, as well from the appearance of the land, as it has been sighted nearly all round, as also from sea soundings, and last, but not least, from the nature of those specimens of rocks which I brought back with me from Victoria Land. If it is all land, it is probably of an area twice the size of Australia.

"Already the first sight of Victoria Land convinces one that it is of volcanic origin. The volcanoes of Victoria Land show a tendency to follow the same line. From Mount Sabine to Mount Melbourne the trend is south-southwesterly. Mount Erebus and Mount Terror lie almost due south of Mount Sabine. Farther north from Mount Sabine the great earth fold, on the septum of which this chain of volcanoes is situated, probably bends a little westward, as shown partly by the surroundings, partly by the position of Balleny island. Northwest of Balleny island the great fold trends perhaps to the knotting point between the Tasmanian axis of folding and that of New Zealand, the former, perhaps, running through Royal Company island, and the latter through or near Auckland island and Macquarie island. The knotting point would probably be somewhere (approximately) near the intersection of the sixtieth parallel of south latitude with the one hundred and fiftieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich. It would just join the line of extinct volcanoes along east Australia on the west, and, perhaps, the active volcanic zone of the North island of New Zealand, or, at all events, the fold which bounds that continent on the east.

"Traced in the opposite direction, the volcanic zone probably runs through Seal islands, the active volcanoes of Christensen and Sarsee, and through Mount Haddington, an extinct volcano in Trinity Land, to Paulet and Bridgman islands, active volcanoes."

FINEST PARK IN THE WORLD.

What John Burroughs and Others Say of the Rock Creek Reservation.

In his entertaining book "Wake Robin," and in the chapter entitled "Spring at the Capital" (pages 165-166), John Burroughs says: "Outside of the city limits the great point of interest to the rambler and lover of nature is the Rock creek region. Rock creek is a large, rough, rapid stream which has its source in the interior of Maryland and flows into the Potomac between Washington and Georgetown. Its course for five or six miles out of Washington is marked by great diversity of scenery. Flowing in a deep valley, which now and then becomes a wild gorge with overhanging rocks and high, precipitous headlands, for the most part wooded—here reposing in long, dark reaches, there sweeping and hurrying around a certain bend or over a rocky bed; receiving at short intervals small runs and spring rivulets, which open up vistas and outlooks to the right and left of the most charming description—Rock creek has an abundance of all the elements that make up not only pleasing but wild and rugged scenery. There is perhaps not another city in the Union that has on its very threshold so much natural beauty and grandeur, such as men seek for in remote forests and mountains. A few touches of art would convert this whole region, extending from Georgetown to what is known as Crystal springs, not more than two miles from the present state department, into a park unequaled by anything in the world. There are passages between these two points as wild and savage and apparently as remote from civilization as anything one meets with in the mountain sources of the Hudson or the Delaware."—"Life and Light."

Atlantic Liners.

There are fully 1,000 tons of piping of various kinds, it is said, in the average Atlantic liner. The condensers will pump up at least 50,000,000 tons of cool water a day. The furnaces will consume no less than 7,500,000 cubic feet of air an hour. The boiler tubes, if placed in a straight line, would stretch nearly ten miles and the condenser tubes more than 25 miles

TROUBLE BORROWERS.

There's many a trouble
Would break like a bubble,
And into the waters of Lethe depart,
Did we not rehearse it,
And tenderly nurse it,
And gave it a permanent place in the heart.

There's many a sorrow
Would vanish to-morrow,
Were we but willing to furnish the wings;
So sadly intruding
And quietly brooding,
It hatches out all sorts of horrible things!

How welcome the seeming
Of looks that are beaming,
Whether one's wealthy or whether one's poor!
Eyes bright as a berry—
Cheeks red as a cherry—
The groan and the curse and the heart-ache can cure.

Resolve to be merry,
All worry to ferry
Across the famed waters that bid us forget,
And, no longer fearful,
Be happy and cheerful—
We feel life has much that's worth living for yet.

THE SERGEANT'S HARD LUCK.

"BULLDOG" Carney had been at it again. It was horses this time; and when horses follow a man off without rhyme or reason, there is often shooting from one side or the other.

And the owner of the horses that had gone off with "Bulldog" Carney lay in hospital in Fort McLeod with a plug of lead in his lung. He was a "rustler" himself, and the general opinion was that Carney had only stolen from a thief.

But the plug of lead—that was a different matter. A man has got to be pretty tough before the shooting of him counts for nothing.

So Sergeant Hetherington and Constable Williams were sent out, with three days' rations, to look Carney up in one direction, while a couple of other constables took the train in another.

Much riding and the viewing of much open plain were the result of the first day's campaign.

On the second day they rode again but the plain was not quite so open. There were several lakes and various other interruptions of the vista.

"What's the sense of this?" said Hetherington to the other constable. "You might as well look for a needle in a haystack or a prayer-book in barracks as look for Carney in this God-forsaken hole. We'll never get a sight of him."

So they camped where they were, beside a small lake, and smoked the pipe of peace, and ate their rations, and cursed the government that had cut their pay down to 50 cents a day; howbeit the sergeant was getting more than that now since his promotion. But that was regulation form—the routine; and so they smoked long and swore hard, and denounced the service any way as being no good to a man, for it made him lazy and unfitted him for anything else. And it was a wild-goose chase, and Carney was a hundred miles away, and they were a pair of fools, as great as the man who had sent them out.

And with the gray regulation blankets pulled over their heads, and their feet warm against the blaze of the smouldering camp fire they slept—slept the prairie sleep, which is long and deep and strong, and as unlike the other as a strong growing bush is unlike a hothouse plant. Slept among the wild roses and great yellow marguerites, and the little, wondering sunflowers—slept on the dry, crisp grass, that was as a gentle spring mattress.

And as they slept a man came and looked at them, and pulled his blonde mustache a little, reflectively, and then stepped back into the night again, and all was still; only the munching and occasional stamp of a horse's hoof over to one side, where the horses were picketed, and the little sneezing blow of the nose of the feeding animals as they cleared the dust out of their nostrils.

"There were ducks flying over all last night," said the sergeant, as he pulled on his long boots. "They're nesting here in these lakes, and I'm going to have a look for some eggs."

Soon a voice came up from the reeds and cat-tails growing in the edge of the lake to the constable, as he busied himself at the morning fire:

"Come down here, Williams. They're slathers of eggs here."

The ducks there were as other ducks; they pulled down the lance-like blades of grass, and plaited them into nests, just out in the water a piece—that was Dame Nature's insurance scheme; but she hadn't reckoned with the sergeant and his merry constable. The long boots and the gray socks and the brown trousers were off in a jiffy, and with shirts tucked up under their arms the two warriors were soon filling their helmets with duck eggs.

"I've got me hat full," said the sergeant, "an' here's a nest with thirteen eggs in it. What'll I do?"

"Better leave it alone," said the constable. "Thirteen's an unlucky number."

"But I want the eggs," pleaded the sergeant. "It's unlucky to go on tinned beef when you can get fresh eggs; besides, me luck couldn't change for the worse, anyway," he added, as he thought of what the exile life in that lone land meant.

"Well, then," said the constable, "if you don't mind the bad luck, wrap them in your shirt, and I will hold your chapeau," and he waded over to the other and held the helmet.

"I'm a quare-looking bird now," said the sergeant, as he peeled the gray flannel shirt over his head, like stripping an otter, and proceeded to transfer the eggs from the watery nest to the impromptu bag.

"I miss my guess, or you'll run up agin hard luck this trip. I wouldn't touch a nest with thirteen eggs in it with a ten-foot pole," said the constable, as they made their way out through the scrub growth on the edge of the lakes.

"Having a bath, gentlemen?" asked a cheery voice from the wilderness, as they emerged into the open.

It was the man who had looked upon them the previous night as they lay sleeping.

The sergeant was so astonished that the corner of the shirt slipped from his hand, and the thirteen eggs rolled into a batter at his feet.

And it was no wonder that he was astonished, for he was looking upon two policemen.

The three V-shaped stripes on the right arm of one of them—the speaker—showed that he was a sergeant. Something about the clothes struck him as being strangely familiar. He could almost swear to a spot or two on the front of the tight-fitting brown jacket.

"Sorry to trouble you, gentlemen," said the same cheery voice, as the owner of it toyed with the butt of a big regulation revolver at his side; "but my partner here and myself took a notion we'd like to join the force; so we just slipped into your clothes till we'd see how we'd look, and as the two suits will hardly go round the four of us, suppose you stack our duds—they're just over there by the camp fire."

As he spoke he absent-mindedly drew forth the big revolver, and rubbed his thumb reflectively over the hammer, and waited for them to make their toilet.

"Ye're up to larks this morning," said the sergeant, thinking that the bad luck of the thirteen eggs was already getting its work in on him. He noticed that their carbines and revolvers and cartridge belts had all been taken possession of by the strangers. He realized that himself and the constable were in the hands of the strangers, and he made a pretty shrewd guess that the man they were after had turned the tables and captured them.

"By George! I guess there's no help for it," said the sergeant, good-humoredly, as he began to crawl into the other man's clothes.

"What's you fellows' game, anyway?" he said, as he pulled on a pair of deer skin riding breeches.

"Well, I take it you're rather a tough lot," said the man with the stripes on his arm, "an' we're going to arrest you for horse-stealin'."

"Well, that's pretty rich for my blood," said the sergeant, as he completed his toilet with a broad-brimmed cowboy hat.

"Now, I suppose you're not much accustomed to wearing jewelry," said the other; "but I'll have to trouble you to put these darbies on," and he tossed the sergeant a pair of handcuffs. The sergeant laughed, but made no movement to put them on.

"Put them on him, Bill," the stranger said, "and if he moves I'll let daylight through him; now the other," he added, as Bill clapped the handcuffs on the sergeant, and in a twinkling they were both handcuffed prisoners. Then they were mounted on the bronchos belonging to the two men who had them in charge, while the latter took their two good police horses and rode beside them.

"You'll get into a fine row over this," said the sergeant to his captor.

The latter laughed good-humoredly.

"Not half so fine a row as I would have got into if it had been the other way about. If you'd got the drop on me first, and I was wearin' the bracelets now, then I would think there was trouble ahead."

"What're you going to do with us, anyway?" said the sergeant. "You can't eat us. Are you going to hold us up an' make the government ransom us out?"

"We're goin' to leave the constable here with a friend who keeps a fashionable hotel in a shack down at Dead Man's Crossing on Deep Cut Creek, an' we're goin' to take you to Maple Creek an' turn you over to the superintendent there. You shouldn't have run off the horses, you know, an' then when the man objected you plugged him."

"You seem to know all about it," said the sergeant. "I suppose you are 'Bull Dog' himself."

"You seem a bit mixed, my friend," replied the stranger, coolly. "You're 'Bull Dog' Carney, and I'm Sergeant Hetherington, in charge of this outfit," and he pulled from his pocket the sergeant's papers, neatly inclosed in a blue government envelope, and smiled derisively at Hetherington.

"You won't be able to work that racket at the barracks at Maple Creek, for some of the fellows'll be sure to know me there."

"Well, if they do, you'll have a longer ride, that's all," answered his captor, "for I mean to get you put in this time sure, for you've escaped often enough before."

That afternoon they came to Dead Man's Crossing, and Williams was left there in charge of a man they found in the shack. He had evidently been expecting Carney, but he opened his eyes with much wonder when he saw the prisoner, and when he understood the situation he went around with a broad grin on his face that was particularly tantalizing.

Maple Creek was seventy miles from Dead Man's Crossing. They stopped all night at Dead Man's Crossing, and made sixty miles of the seventy next day.

In the morning the sergeant had another lesson in the deep diplomacy with which Carney negotiated matters.

"Ride on, Bill," he heard him say to his mate, "and inquire if Sergeant Hetherington has come in yet with his prisoner. You can tell them that you were out on a little reconnoitre for Carney's mate, and that I expected to be there at the barracks about ten o'clock. If there is anybody there knows me—Sergeant Hetherington—just hit the trail back a piece, and we'll move on to the next post. I want to give this man Carney up to strangers, you see; I'm afraid his friends mightn't treat him well. Anyway, I think you'd better ride back to meet me."

Bill galloped away on his errand, and after putting an hour or so to give him a good start, Carney and his prisoner struck camp and followed up.

Bill met them about five miles out of Maple Creek, and reported that there wasn't a soul in the troop stationed there that knew Hetherington. "But they're dead on to Carney's racket, though," he said, "and when I told them that we'd captured him, they thought 'twas a pretty slick piece of business. They say he's harder to trap than a coyote."

"You see," said Carney to the sergeant, "the easier you take this thing, and the loss racket you make, the better you'll get along. If you get rusty and insist that you're sergeant, some of the follows'll round on you, and the bad luck the thirteen eggs brought you'll be nothing to the trouble you'll get into then."

As soon as they got into the fort, Hetherington saw at once that Carney must have been in the force at one time.

He asked for the sergeant-major as soon as they rode into the barracks square, and asked him to report to the superintendent that he had brought in the desperado Carney, who was wanted for horse-stealing and shooting a man.

"I was afraid to take him back to Fort McLeod," he said, "for fear he'd play some trick and get away. He almost made me believe he was somebody else, until I found this letter on him addressed to John Carney."

It was in vain that the sergeant swore that he was Sergeant Hetherington himself; the more he swore against the fate that had tangled him up the more they laughed at him, and told him to drop it.

Carney's reputation for slipping out of the toils stretched from Winnipeg to the highest point of the Rockies, but he'd find that he couldn't do them up at Maple Creek; they were on to his little game.

"Are you quite sure you're not Major Steel himself, or Commissioner Hackie?" asked the superintendent, looking at him with a knowing smile.

At this sally of wit Carney and the rest of them laughed so heartily that the superintendent was so pleased with himself that he told the prisoner he might sit down.

"Your police duties must make you tired," he said, with a wink at Carney.

"All the same, sir," said the poor sergeant, tears almost starting to his eyes as he saw how completely he was in the other's clutches, "you'll be sorry for this when you find out what a mistake you're making."

"Oh, no doubt, no doubt," said the superintendent. "When they find out that you're really a sergeant in the force I'll be reduced to the ranks for this and you'll be made inspector."

"At least, sir," said Hetherington, "you might keep this man who claims to be a sergeant here until this matter is cleared up."

"Capital, capital!" said the superintendent. "A capital idea. We'll keep him here so that your mate can get clean away; then I shall get promotion for that brilliant idea. You're bagged, but you'd rather that your mate got away, eh? Sergeant Hetherington here tells me that he was pretty hot on your mate's trail, and one of the objects for bringing you in here was that he might have his hands clear to follow it up."

So the sergeant was put behind the bars, and Carney and Bill were made free of the canteen, and the superintendent congratulated himself upon the prospect of being able to forward on "Bull Dog" Carney, who had been wanted at headquarters for some time.

Then toward evening, when the fierce heat of the noonday sun had sped itself, Carney and Bill rode forth to hunt up the other man, "the mate," and Maple Creek never saw again the good police horses that went with them, nor the rifles, nor the revolvers, and it took a year's official correspondence to clear up the mystery as to who was to blame for committing Sergeant Hetherington, of the N. W. M. P., as "Bull Dog" Carney, horsethief, and handy man with a gun.

There is a legend that it never was cleared up.—Temple Bar.

WHAT THE LAW DECIDES.

A cause for action for personal injuries resulting from negligence is held, in Lehmann vs. Deuster (Wis.), 37 L. R. A. 333, to be assignable under statutes which provide for the survival of actions for damages to the person.

The preference of a claim for wages given by statutes is held, in Falconio vs. Larsen (Or.), 37 L. R. A. 254, to constitute an incident of the debt or claim for wages, which is assignable and which may pass by an assignment for creditors.

The fact that a certificate of deposit was taken for money deposited in an insolvent bank is held insufficient to relieve the banker from criminal liability, in the case of state vs. Shove (Wis.), 37 L. R. A. 142, and the situation is not changed by the fact that part of the deposit received when the bank was insolvent was made by surrendering a certificate of deposit.

CALIFORNIA has celebrated with imposing features the semi-centennial anniversary of the discovery of gold, a discovery which attracted a large immigration to the state and laid the foundation for the prosperity which it now enjoys. The gold which James W. Marshall and John A. Sutter found in the tail race of their saw mill was not of itself the most valuable product of California; the inflowing population found the climate and the soil of the country to be just as rich as its gold mines. As many millions were coined in real estate as were found in the diggings. The ground upon which the postoffice in San Francisco now stands was sold for $750 and bought back a decade later for $500,000. Lick, the man who left a fortune to build the big telescope, purchased a bit of ground on Montgomery avenue for $50, which he sold thirty years afterward for $1,000,000. The history of the gold discovery of the Pacific coast is full enough of romance and pathos to be told with a degree of confidence at this time.

John A. Sutter was a man of enterprise and had wandered from Baden, Germany, where he had been born in 1803, having been a Swiss guardsman, first to Vancouver, then to the Sandwich Islands, and finally to "Alta California," where he settled, built a farmhouse, gathered flocks and herds, got into his employ skilled workmen, and was prosperous. He, however, wanted one thing—a saw mill. He had been compelled to get his lumber at great labor and expense from the mountains, far distant from his farms. So he sent his millwright, James Wilson Marshall, to find a saw mill site. Marshall, who was a native of New Jersey, had joined Sutter in 1845. He was then 33 years of age. This search for a mill site made a nation rich, filled the pockets of many millionaires, but ruined Sutter and sent Marshall to the poorhouse.

Marshall went in search of the saw mill site in May, 1847. He was a the habit of taking long walks alone, and in one of these—to be exact, on Jan. 24, 1848—he made his great discovery. Watching the tail race of the new mill he noticed bright yellow particles mingled with the dust which had been washed out by the recent rains. At first he attached little importance to it, but upon examination, seeing more and more of it, and some in shining scales, the thought occurred to him that it might be gold. He sent an Indian to his camp for a tin plate, and in this washed out some of the dirt. He found a few grains of clear dust and went off to meditate. He said something to his companions to the effect that perhaps he might find a gold mine. To which they replied with smiles: "Guess not; no such luck." But he could not put the idea out of his mind. The next day he made a closer examination of the washed-up soil, and found a nugget, but was not yet sure that it was gold. He weighed it in his hand. He bit it. He hammered it between stones. Surely it must be gold. And so it was, and so the great secret of the Sierra stood revealed.

He found more of the metal, and then mounted his horse and hastened back to Sutter, to whom he told the story. A private examination by the partners up the river disclosed gold along its course, and in the tributary ravines and creeks.

Sutter regarded the discovery as a misfortune. Without laborers his extensive works must come to a stop, presaging ruin. Gladly would he have shut the knowledge from the world, for a time at least. With the men at the mill the best he could do was to make them promise to continue their work and say nothing of the gold discovery for six weeks, by which time he hoped to have his flour mill completed, and his other affairs so arranged as to enable him to withstand the result. The men, indeed, were not yet prepared to relinquish good wages for the uncertainty of gold gathering.

If only the land could be secured on which this gold was scattered—for probably it did not extend far in any direction—then interloping might be prevented, mining controlled, and the discovery made profitable. It was worth trying, at all events. Mexican grants being no longer possible, Sutter began by opening negotiations with the natives, after the manner of the English colonists on the other side of the continent. Calling a council of the Calomas, an dsome of their neighbors, the lords aboriginal of those lands, Sutter and Marshall obtained from them a three years' lease of a tract some ten or twelve miles square, on trifling payments of cheap ornaments. Sutter then returned to New Helvetia, and the great discovery was consummated.

A messenger intrusted with this portentous secret to Colonel R. B. Mason, then the chief representative of the United States government in California, let the cat out of the bag, and prevented Sutter and Marshall from reaping the reward of their great discovery. This man was a mill hand—Charles Bennett—one of Marshall's associates, who was instructed to say nothing about the gold find, but assist Marshall to make arrangements to secure the saw mill and the land about it with "mineral rights" from the government. But Bennett could not keep the enormous importance of his errand to himself. He met some prospectors who had an idea of finding coal, and during their talk exclaimed: "Oh, I have something here better than coal," exhibiting his specimens. He showed them to others, and so the matter got abroad. Bennett and Marshall found Colonel Mason at Monterey, who, when the messenger exhibited the gold, refused to make any promises as to a grant of land.

The upshot was that gold seekers began to pour in about Caloma and the saw mill from Francisco and Monterey, and Sutter had finally to abandon most of his industrial enterprises. The stories of those days would fill volumes, and it only remains to chronicle the fate of the two luckless men who found the treasure, but did not profit by it. Sutter's saw mill did not prosper, because the gold fever had absorbed all of the labor, and no hands could be gotten to do work other than gold mining. Neither he nor Marshall succeeded in doing much at mining, and so they went from bad to worse.

Marshall was driven away from Caloma by the fights between the Indians and the inrushing gold seekers. When he returned several years afterward he was bankrupt. He did all sorts of things for eight years, and in 1857 returned to his old home and made a living by sawing wood, making gardens, and cleaning wells. Subsequently he received a small pension from the state, but died in 1885 in poverty at the age of 73 years. Sutter met almost as bad a fate. He died almost in want, and was at one time threatened with dreams of the almshouse.

Marshall's secret once out, the world began to pour into California. There were no railroads and no other sort of roads to the Golden Gate in those years, but all that then were in the West led to California, and crowded caravans crossed the Sierras constantly and thronged packet ships sailed from Europe and from the Atlantic coast of America round the Horn to the glittering shores of the new El Dorado.

From February, 1848, to May, 1848, more than 300 square-rigged vessels were lying in the harbors stranded and disabled for want of sailors, the crews having deserted to go to the gold region.

At this time the average yield of gold for each man engaged was far greater than in any subsequent year, yet the tools were primitive, a they were a year ago in the Klondike, being merely a pan, a rocker, and a knife. The latter was used only in crevicing; that is, to pick out nuggets from the cracks of the rocks, or occasionally in dry diggings rich in coarse gold. But the returns were large because there were few to share the gains and those few had the choice of the best placers. In this way in the fall of 1848 and the winter of 1849 there were gathered by a population of 8,000 or 10,000 gold to the value of $10,000,000, an average of $1,000 and more to each man for the season.

IN THE first half of the year 1849, 15,000 souls were added to the population of San Francisco, and during the last six months of that year came 24,000 more. When the returns were made to the United States authorities in 1851, the town contained 371 individuals, and very few more resided in it up to the discovery of gold at Sutter's Mill. Like the magic seed of the Indian juggler, which grew, blossomed and bore fruit before the eyes of the spectators, San Francisco seemed to accomplish in a day the growth of half a century. The people came from every State in the Union and every land under the sun. They lived in board shanties, and in canvas tents pitched in the midst of sand and mud. They slept in rude cots, on boards, tables, counters, floors, trucks in the open air; some had horse blankets, others only a covering of fleas.

The employments of the newcomers were as varied as their nationalities. They worked an anything and everything. Common laborers received $10 per day and ordinary mechanics $20. Five dollars a day was about the smallest stipend paid even to boys. A pick and a shovel were worth $10; a tin pan or wooden bowl $5, and a butcher's knife $30. Lumber rose to $500 per 1,000 feet. Wheat flour and salt pork sold at $400 a barrel; a small loaf of bread was 50 cents, and a hard-boiled egg $1. You paid $3 to get into the circus, and $55 for a private box. Ordinary coarse boots cost $40 a pair; a stout pair was worth $100. When a shirt became dirty the wearer threw it away. Washing cost $15 a dozen in 1849.

Rents were monstrous. Three thousand dollars a month was paid in advance for a store hurriedly built of rough boards; and a small room on the second floor used as a lawyer's office rented for $1,000 a month. Lodging was equally extravagant. A bedroom in a hotel costing $250 a month, and a sleeping berth or "bunk," one of fifty in the same apartment, $6 a week.

In the social life of San Francisco at that period the gamblers cut the widest swath. They constituted a controlling class, with whom was all the physical, moral and financial force. Nearly everybody gambled and the stakes were sometimes enormous. As high as $20,000, it is said, have been risked upon a card. Five thousand, three thousand and one thousand were repeatedly ventured.

Sunday was a "wide-open" day in California in 1849. It was looked upon only as a day for trading, recreation, spreeing, business meetings and preparation for the business of the ensuing week. It was very common to see large cards hung up in boarding-houses and business places like this: "All bills paid up here on Sunday." That was the day for miners to get their blacksmith work done and lay in their supply of provisions for the week; the day for holding public meetings for the enactment of other municipal business.

MRS. M. S. ALLEN.

Her Record for the Year Was 21,026 Miles and 117 Centuries.

Mrs. M. S. Allen, of Worcester, Mass., is a proud woman. One hundred and twenty-eight century bars hang from the lapel of her cycling jacket and eleven more are to be added. She has beaten the 1896 record of Mrs. A. E. Rinehart, of Denver, who made 17,196 miles and 116 centuries, by riding last year 21,026 miles and 117 centuries. Out of the 365 days of 1897 she was in the saddle 266.

That Mrs. Allen didn't ride 365 days of the year was not her fault. An attack of pneumonia, a sprained ankle and prohibitive weather alone are at fault. And now Mrs. Allen is looking forward to a year of cycling feats that will outdo her own wonderful achievements, including a trip awheel, unaccompanied, from Boston to Chicago and to other Western cities.

General Wade Hampton is writing a book which will be entitled "The History of the Cavalry of Northern Virginia."

F. Marion Crawford waited over fifteen years to see his first magazine article published. In the meantime he had written about a dozen two-volume novels.

Rudyard Kipling has made a new price for his prose. His railroad story, "007," published in Scribner's, numbers 7,000 words, for which he received $1,500, or about 21 cents a word.

R. D. Blackmore when asked about his rate of speed replied in verse:

The proper point about a book—
Or be it praised or smitten—
Is not to ask how long it took,
But what it is when written.

Sir Walter Besant says that he finds the rate at which a novel advances in his hands, taking one day with another, is not more than about 1,000 words a day. A long novel of, say, 180,000 words, takes from eight to ten months. He does not find that it is the least use attempting to work at fiction for more than about three hours a day.

Hall Caine says: "As a novelist I have never been able to consider my work in relation to speed and time. As a journalist in the old days I was compelled to do so, and can remember that at the death of Prince Leopold I wrote a memoir of many long columns between 7 o'clock at night and the time of going to press with the morning paper. 'The Deemster' occupied, I think, about nine months in the writing of the text, but it had been nearly a year in hand before I began to write. Something like the same circumstances occurred in the case of 'The Boudman.' 'The Scapegoat' was written either two or three times, word for word. The first half of 'The Manxman' was written twice. If I do three or four days' writing in the week and produce 5,000 or 6,000 words with which I am content I am satisfied, and more than satisfied."

THE WORLD'S ESTIMATE.

It Is Usually Not Far from Correct, Witness the Incidents.

Men, as a whole, form quite accurate judgments of the characters of their associates. Occasionally, when this is expressed in the quaint words of foreigners, the apiness of the judgment is very apparent.

Some years ago two young men obtained employment under an influential company in Calcutta. They were brothers, and set up housekeeping together. The six native servants whom they employed were not long in forming an estimate of the new arrivals.

"Our masters," they declared, "belong to a new caste that we have not known. They do not smoke, nor drink strong drink; neither do they swear, and they speak and behave kindly to us. We like the new caste well."

As true an estimate was formed by a student in the University of Peking. He entered the university for the purpose of studying English, and not long after went to a native teacher to buy a Bible. He was not content until he had procured an expensive copy of the Old Testament, a parallel English and Chinese New Testament, and a hymn-book. Then he told his reason for wanting them.

The professor whose classes he attended had excited his admiration, because he was wholly unlike the Chinese teachers by whom the young man had been previously taught.

"Why," he said, "Professor King seems to love his pupils. He sympathizes with them, never becomes impatient when they are stupid, and his conduct and language show that he possesses something that I never knew a Chinese teacher to possess, and I do not know where he gets it unless from the Bible. For this reason I want to study the Bible and learn some Christian hymns."

The "world" does not hesitate to declare its approval of the legitimate fruits of Christian belief. If men ever condemn Christianity, it is because those who profess to accept it do not bear these fruits.

On the Nile.

War correspondents with the British gunboats on the Nile describe the banks as well clothed with vegetation, but the strip of green is only a thin mask to the desert behind. It is noticed in ascending the river that the population becomes blacker, more scantily clad and nearer the savage state. An English gunboat on the Nile usually carries 9-pounders and Nordenfeldts, and the fighting crew is less than a dozen men. But the dervishes are weak in artillery and keep out of the way of the floating batteries.

Learning in Texas.

New pedagogue (fresh from the East)—I know exactly what you want, gentlemen. You do not wish a lot of inconsequential facts crammed into the children's heads. You want me to teach the young idea how to shoot.

President of the school board (enthusiastically)—That's it, stranger.—Judge.

Every one's favorite adjective, which he secretly enjoys most when applied to himself, is "prominent."

We have noticed that when a man becomes engaged to be married, he never brags about it.

NOTICE No. 320.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
Independence, California.
January 28, 1898.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT Hugh J. Cannon, whose postoffice address is Salt Lake City, Salt Lake county, State of Utah, has made application for a patent for twenty-nine hundred and fifty linear feet of the Confidence and Mendocino Lode bearing gold, situate in no organized mining district, Inyo county, State of California, and described in the official plats and field notes on file in this office as follows, viz:

Said Confidence mining claims described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at a pine post three (3) feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "L. L. S. M." (identical with old lode line monument at southerly end of lode) whence main working shaft bears N. 77 deg. 15 min. E. 0.45 chains and U.S.L.M. No. 72 bears S 77 deg 47 min E 4.54 chains distant.

Thence the variation of the magnetic needle being 15 deg 15min E along line of lode N 25 deg 15 min E 1.20 chains intersection of ravines 2.42 chains mouth of small tunnel 20 links to east 5.30 chains ravine course E and W and end of big outcrop 7.12 chains shaft No 2, 30 links to right, 16 links deep on vein 7.40 chains hole 10 links to right 8.37 chains ravine course N E and S W 17.92 chains ravine course N E and S W 21.97 chains 1450 feet to pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "L.L.N.M." (identical with original load line monument at northerly end of lode.)

SURVEY OF EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES

Beginning at corner No. 1. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed U.S.S. 67, No. 1, identical with corner number 1 of Mendocino location of this survey. Whence U. S. location monument No. 72 bears N 20 deg. 50 min. E 1 1-10 feet. Said location monument is a granite stone 30 inches long, 20 inches wide, 6 inches thick, marked "U.S.L.M. No. 72," set 15 inches in ground with brass plate set in top, with conical mound of stone, 6 feet square and 4 feet high beside it. From said U. S. L. M. No. 72, mouth of Confidence tunnel bears N 53 deg 15 min W 3.94 chains The top of main working shaft bears N 74 deg 15 min W 4.14 chains. And a hill just north of the bend where the road to the mine from Death Valley turns eastward (the only hill there that has large detached blocks of granite covering its east side) bears N 74 deg 37 min W about 3 miles 60 chains.

Thence the variation being 15 deg 15 min. east.

Course No. 1, N 77 deg. 34 min. W 1.06 chains cross small ravine, course N W and S E 4.545 chains 300 feet to south lode line monument of this location, whence shaft No 1 bears N 36 deg 15 min E 3.48 chains shaft No. 3 bears N 19 deg. 30 min. E 12.12 chains 9.09 chains 600 feet to corner No. 2 identical with corner No. 5 Mendocino location of this survey.

A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone, scribed "U.S.S. 67 No 2," whence intersection of ravines bears N 75 deg 30 min E 2.12 chains thence deflecting 102 deg 49 min to right and along westerly boundary of this claim.

Course No 2, N 25 deg 15 min E 0.61 chains road in ravine 1.67 chains road to cabin 2.27 chains to the S W corner of cabin 30 feet by 60 feet 9.09 chains to ravine 21.97 chains 1450 feet to corner No. 3, a pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground in stone mound scribed "U.S.S. 67, No 3" whence location corner of this location bears north 66 deg 30 min west, 1 50-100 chains on north side of ravine. Thence deflecting 77 deg 11 min to right. Course No. 3, S 77 deg 34 min E 4.454 chains, 294 feet to north lode true monument of this location, previously described. Whence ravine bears N 25 deg 15 min E 1 67-100 chains, course E and W 7.39 chains 487 8-100 feet, to corner No 4 location corner of this location. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with stone mound scribed "U.S.S. 67, No. 4," whence ravine bears N 20 deg 50 min E 2 50-100. Thence deflecting 98 deg 24 min to the right. Course No. 4, S 20 deg 50 min W 7.50 chains ravine 10.50 chains. Branch of ravine 15.00 chains ravine 18.00 chains ravine 21.22 chains ravine 21.65 chains 1429 feet to corner No. 1, the place of beginning. Containing seventeen and 64-100 acres.

Said Mendocino mining claim is described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at a pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground, with mound of stone scribed "L.L.N.M" (identical with old line monument) at northerly end of lode whence main working shaft bears N 77 deg 15 min E 0 45 chains and U.S.L.M. No 72 bears S 77 deg 47 min E 4.545 chains. Thence the variation of the magnetic needle being 15 deg 15 min E along line of lode S 34 deg 45 min W 0.50 chains small ravine course N W 1.80 chains small cut in outcrop of vein course E and W 2.20 chains shaft 60 feet deep, in vein, bears west 10 feet, 2.94 chains. Notice monument of Mendocino location 5.00 chains end of outcrop and north edge of gulch No. 1 course E and W 8.00 chains. South edge of gulch 21.70 chains north edge of gulch course E and W, 22.72 chains 1500 feet to pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 12 inches in ground in stone mound scribed "L.L.S.M." whence old lode line monument of this Mendocino location bears S 34 deg 45 min W 38 links distant.

SURVEY OF EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES.

Beginning at corner No. 1, identical with corner No. 1 of Confidence location of this survey. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone, scribed "U.S.S. 67 No. 1."

Thence the variation being 15 deg 15 min east.

Course No. 1, S 34 deg 45 min W 0.85 chains ravine course N W and S E 5.75 chains north side of gulch, course E and W 7.88 chains. South side of gulch, course E and W 21.21 chains. North side of gulch course E and W 22.73 chains 1500 feet to corner No. 2. A pine post 3 feet long, 4 inches square, set 18 inches in ground with mound of stone scribed "U.S.S. 67 No. 2," whence corner of the location bears S 34 deg 45 min W 1.51 chains south side of gulch No. 2 bears 34 deg 45 min W 1.67 chains thence deflecting 67 deg 41 min to the right.

Course No. 2, N 77 deg 34 min W 4.545 chains 300 feet south lode line monument 5.85 chains 386.10 feet corner No. 3. A pine post 3 feet long, set 18 inches in ground, with mound of stone, scribed "U.
